

AFTER ✦ NOONTIDE

SELECTED BY ~

• MARGARET • E • WHITE •

REFERENCE LIBRARY * HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO. * BOSTON, MASS.

Archive Collection

And if this book may not leave the Office sayd 7 days must be returned within 7 days

AFTER NOONTIDE

SELECTED BY

MARGARET E. WHITE

*For age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress ;
And as the evening twilight fades away,
The sky is filled with stars invisible by day.*

LONGFELLOW.

BOSTON AND NEW YORK
HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY

The Riverside Press, Cambridge

1892

Copyright, 1883,
BY MARGARET E. WHITE.

All rights reserved.

The Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass., U. S. A.
Electrotyped and Printed by H. O. Houghton & Company.

PREFACE.

THE extracts which form this little volume have been collected, and are now published, in the hope of presenting a cheerful view of the afternoon of life, by bringing forward its pleasures, possibilities, and hopes.

The compiler would gratefully acknowledge the courtesy of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Roberts Brothers, and D. Appleton & Co., as well as of various authors and friends who have kindly given her permission to make use of their works.

BROOKLINE, September 25, 1888.

AFTER NOONTIDE.

OLD AGE, this is Mr. Professor. Mr. Professor, this is Old Age.

Old Age. Mr. Professor, I hope to see you well. I have known you for some time, though I think you did not know me. Shall we walk down the street together?

Professor (drawing back a little). We can talk more quietly perhaps in my study. Will you tell me how it is you seem to be acquainted with everybody you are introduced to, though he evidently considers you an entire stranger?

Old Age. I make it a rule never to force myself upon a person's recognition until I have known him at least five years.

Professor. Do you mean to say that you have known me so long as that?

Old Age. I do. I left my card on you longer ago than that, but I am afraid you never read it; yet I see you have it with you.

Professor. Where?

Old Age. There, between your eyebrows, — three straight lines running up and down; all the probate courts know that token, — “Old Age, his mark.” Put your forefinger on the inner end of one eyebrow, and your middle finger on the inner end of the other eyebrow; now separate the fingers, and you will smooth out my sign-manual; that’s the way you used to look before I left my card.

Professor. What message do people generally send back when you first call on them?

Old Age. Not at home. Then I leave a card and go. Next year I call; get the same answer; leave another card. So for five or six, sometimes for ten years or more. At last, if they don’t let me in, I break in through the front door or the windows.

We talked together in this way for some time. Then Old Age said again, — come, let us walk down the street together; — and offered me a cane, an eyeglass, a tip-pet, and a pair of overshoes. No, much obliged to you, said I, I don’t want those things, and I had a little rather talk with you here privately, in my study. So I dressed myself up in a jaunty way and walked out alone ; got a fall, caught a cold, was laid up with a lumbago, and had time to think over this whole matter.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Long observation has convinced me that sixty-three is an age at which the majority of persons may be termed old ; and, as a rule, we may adopt this as the epoch of the commencing decline of life.

JOHN GARDNER, M. D.

Grow old along with me !
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made :
Our times are in His hand
Who saith, " A whole I planned, Youth shows but half ; trust God ; see all,
nor be afraid ! "

Therefore I summon age
To grant you this heritage, Life's struggle having so far reached its term ;
Thence shall I pass, approved
A man, for aye removed From the developed brute ; a god, though in the germ.

And I shall thereupon Take rest, ere I be gone Once more on my adventure brave and new :
Fearless and unperplexed,
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armor to in-due.

ROBERT BROWNING.

The world is so full of sadness that I more and more make it a point to avoid all sadness that does not come in the sphere of duty. I only read "chipper books." I hang prisms in my windows to fill the room with rainbows; I cultivate the gayest flowers; I seek cheerfulness in every possible way. This is my "necessity in being old."

LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

That phrase of "the prime of life," as applied to the years which follow the grand climacteric, is not mine. It was the careful statement of that Nestor of physicians, Dr. James Jackson, that it was in those years that a man came to the full of his earthly ability. It is there, he would say, that the two curves cross, — the curve of physical strength and the curve of professional experience. Physical strength increases, of course, as a man's body grows: it begins to decline when he passes middle life, whatever that age may be.

On the other hand, because we are children of God bound on an infinite voyage, the other curve, which represents the increase of our experience, constantly ascends in an unending parabola. According to Dr. Jackson, these two curves cross each other at about that period of life which our friend has attained (seventy), so that at that period he is at the prime of his earthly usefulness. If he cannot catch a fly or catch a ball quite so well as when he was one-and-twenty, or as my young friends who sit before me can, he can do some things and say some things which no man of one-and-twenty can do and say, and we know that he can be something which no man of one-and-twenty ever was.

EDWARD E. HALE.

Nor love thy life nor hate ; but what thou liv'st

Live well ; how long or short, permit to Heaven.

JOHN MILTON.

M. Flourens conceives he has discovered a fixed relation to exist between the time required for the growth to maturity of an animal body, and its ultimate natural duration, all causes of premature mortality excluded.

Taking his observations from the group mammalia, of the class vertebrata, as having the closest relation to man, and such species as are permitted to live the full term of their natural lives under circumstances not admitting error or doubt, — the elephant, horse, dog, etc., — he found that their natural life extends exactly to five times the period of their growth. Applying the rule thus obtained to human life, and taking the age when the body is fully matured to be twenty years, he concludes the natural duration of the life of man to be one hundred years.

JOHN GARDNER, M. D.

It is said of Cornaro that, He was extraordinarily sober, observed the rules which he mentions in his writings ; and dieted himself always with so much wisdom and precaution that, finding his natural heat decaying by degrees in his old age, he also diminished his diet by degrees, so far as to stint himself to the yolk of an egg for a meal, and sometimes, a little before his death, it served him for two meals. By this means he preserved his health, and was also vigorous, to the age of a hundred years; his mind did not decay, he never had need of spectacles, neither lost he his hearing. And that which is no less true than difficult to believe, is, that he preserved his voice so clear and harmonious that, at the end of his life, he sung with as much strength and delight as he did at the age of twenty-five years.

FROM THE PAMPHLETEER, VOL. XIX.

I stand upon the summit of my years.
Behind, the toil, the camp, the march, the strife,
The wandering, and the desert; vast, afar,
Beyond this weary way, behold! the Sea!
The sea o'erswept by clouds and winds and wings,
By thoughts and wishes manifold, whose breath
Is freshness and whose mighty pulse is peace.
Palter no question of the dim Beyond;
Cut loose the bark; such voyage itself is rest;
Majestic motion, unimpeded scope,
A widening heaven, a current without care.

Eternity!— Deliverance, Promise, Course!
Time-tired souls salute thee from the shore.

BROWNLEE BROWN.

The young man looks forward, the old man looks back. How far-extended the shadows lie in the setting sun ; the steeple a mile long reaching across the plain, as the sun stretches out the hills in grotesque dimensions. So are the events of life in the old man's consciousness.

THEODORE PARKER.

The old should consider that all the seasons of life have their several trials allotted to them ; and that to bear the infirmities of age with becoming patience, is as much their duty, as it is that of the young to resist the temptations of youthful pleasure. By calmly enduring, for the short time that remains, what Providence is pleased to inflict, they both express a resignation most acceptable to God, and recommend themselves to the esteem and assistance of all who are around them.

HUGH BLAIR.

If it were absurd to wish for limbs that could undergo exhaustion and laceration without our feeling them, and nerves that would give no knowledge of fever inflammation, it would be no less rational to desire a release of the mind from those infirmities of age, which are but a long fatigue, — life's final illness. All the lights of perception and emotion flow in upon us through the colored glass of our organic frame; and however perfect the power of mental vision may remain, if the windows be darkened, the radiance will be obscured.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

As when, a lady mine, with chiselled touch,
The stone unhewn and cold
Becomes a living mould,
The more the marble wastes, the more the statue grows;
So if the working in my soul be such That good is but evolved by Time's dread blows,
The vile shell, day by day,
Falls like superfluous flesh away,
Oh take whatever bonds my spirit knows,
And reason, virtue, power, within me lay.

MICHAEL ANGELO BUONAROTTI.

The greatest disappointment that I meet in old age is that I am not so good as I expected to be, nor so wise. I am ashamed to say that I was never so dissatisfied with myself as I am now. It seems to me as if it could not be the right state of things. My ideal of old age has been something very different. And yet, seventy years is still within the infancy of the immortal life and progress. Why should I not say with the Apostle, "Not as though I had attained, neither were already perfect." I can say with him, in some respects, "I have fought a good fight." I have fought through early false impressions of religion. I have fought through many life problems. I have fought in these later years, through Mansel and Herbert Spencer, as hard a battle as I have ever had. But I have come, through all, to the most rooted conviction of the Infinite Rectitude and Goodness. Nothing, I think, can ever shake me from this, — that all is well, and shall be forever, whatever becomes of me.

ORVILLE DEWEY.

They advance no argument, who say that old age is not engaged in active duty, and resemble those who should say that the pilot in navigation is unemployed, for that while some climb the mast, others run up and down the decks, others empty the bilge-water, he, holding the helm, sits at the stern at his ease. He does not do these things that the young men do, but in truth he does much greater and better things. Great actions are not achieved by exertions of strength, or speed, or by quick movements of bodies, but by talent, authority, judgment; of which faculties old age is usually so far from being deprived, that it is even improved in them. . . . Rashness, beyond a doubt, belongs to life when in its bloom; wisdom to it in old age.

CICERO.

Multitude of years should teach wisdom.

JOB.

As travellours when the twilight's come,
And in the sky the stars appear,
The past daie's accidents do summe
With, Thus wee saw there, and thus here.

Then Jacob-like, lodge in a place,
A place, and no more, is set down,
When till the day restore the race
They rest and dream homes of their own;

So for this night I linger here,
And full of tossings to and fro,
Expect still when Thou wilt appear,
That I may get me up and go.

I long and grone and grieve for Thee,
For Thee my words, my tears do gush ;
O that I were but where I see !
Is all the note within my Bush.

As Birds robbed of their native wood,
Although their diet may be fine,
Yet neither sing, nor like their food,
But with the thought of home do pine ;

So do I mourn and hang my head ;
And though Thou dost me fullnes give,
Yet look I for far better bread,
Because by this man cannot live.

O feed me then ! and since I may Have yet more days, more nights to Count,
So strengthen me, Lord, all the way,
That I may travel to thy Mount.

HENRY VAUGHAN.

Uncertainty as to life is not peculiar to old age. The young and the active are even more liable to fatal accidents and violent diseases than the aged ; and if the postponement of death be an advantage, age has already obtained it.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

We are afraid !—In this world which our Father in Heaven has builded for us, and notwithstanding the clear warrant He has given that his power is evermore with us, we are afraid. Our souls are in the Almighty's keeping as a frightened bird in the hand of that compassionate friend who has picked it up where it has fallen, and seeks to heal its hurt. We are afraid ; — not merely in the absence of evidence, but against evidence of the wise and kindly intent of the power that rules our ways, and of the higher possibilities opened to our spirits. We cry out that it is dark and we cannot see. We ask as the men of old asked for "a sign from heaven," and the only answer given us is that the world is already full of signs, for those who will read and profit by them.

.

The nameless, indefinite dread of the ages of superstitious terror, that have passed, still lingers in our minds, and this we must strive to shake off. Whether or not any more specific revelation from the skies is yet to be vouchsafed to man as to his nature and destiny, the present task of the human soul to learn to commit itself into the hand of its Maker with childlike confidence and trust, seems clear and plain.

HOWARD N. BROWN.

Whither, oh, whither wilt thou wing thy way?

What solemn region first upon thy sight
Shall break, unveiled for terror or delight?
What hosts, magnificent in dread array,
My spirit! when thy prison-house of clay
After long strife is rent? Fond, fruitless quest!

The unfledged bird, within his narrow nest,
Sees but a few green branches o'er him play,
And through their parting leaves, by fits revealed,

A glimpse of summer sky; nor knows the field

Wherein his dormant powers must yet be tried.

Thou art that bird! — of what beyond thee lies

Far in the untracked, immeasurable skies Knowing but this — that thou shalt find thy Guide.

FELICIA D. HEMANS.

His (Stein's) words . . . show, perhaps, something of the indifference natural to one who, by the near view of death, has grown so naturalized in the other world, that he feels himself rather to gain than to lose something when a friend enters it.

LIFE AND TIMES OF STEIN BY J. R. SEELEY.

They, whose removal is deferred till they are full of days, take with them, if they have numbered their days well, all that earth can give, and obtain before their departure a serene anticipation of which youth knows nothing, and which is hardly attainable in middle life. We speak of age as a second childhood in reference only to the helplessness and imbecility with which, in cases of prolonged decay, it is attended. But there is another and more natural point of resemblance between these stages of our earthly existence which it is consolatory to contemplate. We become as little children, in the state of sure and quiescent dependence, which we then — and hardly till then, learn to place in our Creator and Preserver. The course of nature falls in with our reason and our duty. We trust in our Heavenly Father, as a child relies upon the protection and love of its parents ; and in that trust, when the night comes, we lie down contentedly.

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

Ah, on the brink
Of each new age of great eternity, I think,
After the ages have all countless grown,
Our souls will poise and launch with eager wing,
Forgetting blessedness already known,
In sweet impatience for God's next good thing.

H. H.

Undoubtedly the last half of life is the best work-time. Beautiful is youth's enthusiasm, and grand its achievements ; but the most solid and permanent good is done by the persistent strength and wide experience of middle age.

LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

One must either die or get old.

GEORGE ELIOT.

I am not old. — I cannot be old
Though threescore years and ten
Have wasted away, like a tale that is told,
The lives of other men :
I am not old ; though friends and foes
Alike have gone to their graves,
And left me alone to my joys and my woes,

As a rock in the midst of the waves :
I am not old — I cannot be old,
Though tottering, wrinkled, and gray :
Though my eyes are dim, and my marrow is cold,
Call me not old to-day.

For early memories round me throng,
Old times, and manners, and men,
As I look behind on my journey so long
Of threescore miles and ten.
I look behind, and am once more young,
Buoyant, and brave, and bold,
And my heart can sing as of yore it sung,
Before they called me old.

.
'T is not long since — it cannot be long —
My years so soon were spent,
Since I was a boy, both straight and strong,
Yet now am I feeble and bent.

A dream, a dream — it is all a dream !
A strange, sad dream goodsooth ;
For old as I am, and old as I seem,
My heart is full of youth :
Eye hath not seen, tongue hath not told,
And ear hath not heard it sung, How buoyant and bold, though it seems to grow old,

Is the heart forever young.
Forever young, though life's old age
Hath every nerve unstrung ;
The heart, the heart is a heritage
That keeps the old man young !

MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER.

It is a man's own fault, it is from want of use, if his mind grows torpid in old age.

- SAMUEL JOHNSON.

Old age ought to be a brighter, and a calmer, and a more serene thing than manhood. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than his first, if he will look on and not back. There is a peculiar simplicity of heart and a touching singleness of purpose in Christian old age, which has ripened gradually and not fitfully. It is then that to the wisdom of the serpent is added the harmlessness of the dove ; it is then that to the firmness of manhood is joined almost the gentleness of womanhood ; it is then that the somewhat austere and sour character of growing strength, moral and intellectual, mellows into the rich ripeness of an old age made sweet and tolerant by experience ; it is then that man returns to first principles. There comes a love more pure and deep than the boy could ever feel ; there comes a conviction, with a strength beyond that which the boy could ever know, that the earliest lesson of life is infinite, Christ is all in all.

FREDERICK W ROBERTSON.

Did you see in the Times the other day about old age ? When real decadence begins — and it said at seventy, and so I feel it. Every year now seems to tell more and more. New chinks appear in the poor mud cottage. May more and more warm daylight be let in, and I do hope I can say it is so ; sometimes the bits of blue sky that appear look so blue, so bright, and the depths beyond so dazzling and pure, the dim eye of nature closes, only to make way for that of faith.

L. A. HARE.

And so beside the Silent Sea

I wait the muffled oar ;

No harm from Him can come to me

On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift

Their fronded palms in air ;

I only know I cannot drift

Beyond His love and care.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Old age has little romance. Only some rare man, like Wilhelm von Humboldt, keeps it still fresh in his bosom.

THEODORE PARKER.

This playing of whist before dinner has [since that] become a habit with me, so that unless there be something else special to do, — unless there be hunting, or I am wanted to ride in the Park by the young tyrant of my household, — it is “my custom always in the afternoon.” I have sometimes felt sore with myself for this persistency, feeling that I was making myself a slave to an amusement which has not, after all, much to recommend it. I have often thought that I would break myself away from it, and “swear off,” as Rip Van Winkle says. But my swearing off has been like that of Rip Van Winkle. And now, as I think of it coolly, I do not know but that I have been right to cling to it. As a man grows old, he wants amusement more even than when he is young; and then it becomes so difficult to find amusement. Reading should, no doubt, be the delight of men’s leisure hours. Had I to choose between books and cards, I should no doubt take the books. But I find I can seldom read with pleasure for above an hour and a half at a time, or more than three hours a day.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

When we first hear the epithet "old" applied to us, we are shocked and would willingly believe it untrue; but it soon becomes familiar, and we acquiesce in the imputation as inevitable. Those of us display most wisdom who do not attempt to blind themselves to the fact, but begin without delay to consider the new wants age creates, and the new duties it imposes.

JOHN GARDNER, M. D.

The natural temperature of the body is lowest in the aged. They cannot bear the cold well, and are easily made ill by it. Therefore their clothing should be warmest, and, if very old, they should not sleep in a room where the temperature is below 50°. In warm, pleasant weather, they can be in the open air if it pleases them; in fact, the more they are out of doors, if the conditions are favorable, the better. But in very cold weather, those who are far advanced in life should be comfortably housed. As has been said, a very old person "risks death from cold stroke by even walking out of doors when the temperature approaches zero."

We know that the powers of digestion must necessarily be weaker at seventy than in early life ; hence the importance of a correct dietetic regimen. Food must be taken oftener, and less in amount at each feeding. After a person has reached the age just stated, he should take food four times a day, until he is eighty years old ; then, for the next ten years that he lives, five meals each day are none too many, and his food should be simple and easily digested. There are few people near the age of ninety who have many sound teeth ; therefore, during the years which follow their loss, unless false can be worn, their diet should be liquid and made up largely of milk. Beef tea and fluid extracts of beef, properly prepared, are of great assistance in feeding the aged.

NEWSPAPER EXTRACT.

O, Sir, you are old ;
Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine ; you should be ruled and led
By some discretion that discerns your state
Better than you yourself.

SHAKESPEARE.

He that hath done all his business, and is begotten to a glorious hope by the seed of an immortal spirit, can never die too soon, nor live too long.

JEREMY TAYLOR.

The insular patriot, cast forth by ill-health or fortune upon the world, is chafed at first by every sight and sound of foreign things, and thinks he has left all good behind ; but, as he grows to the scene around him, he is hit by many a happy phrase and won by many a graceful usage, and fairly conquered at last by a literature, and art, and national life, which reveal to him an unimagined type of human culture. The migration which thus dissipates the prepossessions of the family, the sect, the nation, we may well suppose effective against the prejudices of a world ; so that Death may be but the provision for taking us abroad, ere we have stopped too long at home, and unsealing the closed inlets of wisdom, affection, and reverence, by the surprise of new light. In this aspect, Death, instead of frustrating the ends of life, becomes the great arrester of ills, — the liberator of souls, for both the visible and the invisible world.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

My soul there is a countrie
Afar beyond the stars,
Where stands a winged sentrie
All skilfull in the wars.
There, above noise and danger,
Sweet peace sits crown'd with smiles,
And One born in a Manger Commands the Beauteous files.
He is thy gracious friend
And (O my soul awake !)
Did in pure love descend
To die here for thy sake.
If thou can'st get but thither,
There grows the flower of peace,
The Rose that cannot wither,
Thy fortress and thy ease.
Leave then thy foolish ranges ;
For none can thee secure,
But One who never changes,
Thy God, thy life, thy cure.

HENRY VAUGHAN.

My memory is not what it was, I think.
Well, I must be patient. I am an old man, and so patience ought to be my special business. There is not much else for me ; there is no work for me in the world.
My share in life I have had, and there is no further part for me in the struggles and successes of it. Now I have to study to be quiet, and wait for my dismissal.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

As people grow older they come at length to live so much in memory that they often think with a kind of pleasure of losing their dearest blessings. Nothing can be so perfect while we possess it, as it will seem when remembered. The friend we love best may sometimes weary us by his presence or vex us by his infirmities. How sweet to think of him as he will be to us after we have outlived him ten or twelve years! Then we can recall him in his best moments, bid him stay with us as long as we want his company, and send him away when we wish to be alone again.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Although love of the lost gradually fades away with time, and exists more in memory than in feeling, yet the love of the friends who remain to us is increased in intensity by the bereavements to which, in the course of nature, age is compelled to submit.

JOSIAH QUINCY.

Why should sourness and peevishness of temper have anything to do with old age? They are the vices of the narrow and selfish. The liberal and benevolent, like rich and generous wines, improve with keeping. What will turn acid in so short a life as ours, must owe its sourness to poverty of spirit and meanness of character. Nobler dispositions soften and ameliorate, and become more kind and disinterested, with length of years ; acquiring a smoothness, a milkiness, a sweetness of character, commensurate to their period of existence, and preparatory to that intellectual state which they are shortly to enjoy.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

O God, thou hast taught me from my youth ; and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works. Now also, when I am old and gray-headed, O God, forsake me not ; until I have shewed thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

PSALM LXXI. 17, 18.

We have just been getting some little rhododendron trees for our balconies, which are to flower next spring, and I do so like looking at the already fully formed buds, next year's flowers, getting ready now, showing through the old leaves that will fall off before their beauty begins. The leaves have nursed the future flowers all the year, and they will die when the flowers are ready to bloom, just as our bodies fall off and die when our souls are ready to flower in the spiritual world. One sees this clearly with the rhododendron buds because they are so large in autumn, but I believe every single leaf has a bud in its charge which it shelters all the summer, and then it dies to give its nursling air and space to grow in. The law of sacrifice and hope is read to us, you see, by every autumn leaf that the wind blows in our faces, whether they are brown, or like yours, crimson and gold. Yes! I like the crimson and gold ones best; they are like contented, happy old people who understand that the end is better and more glorious every way than the beginning, — just a going on from better to better.

ANNIE KEARY.

I have begun to look upon myself as an old man. I never did before. I have felt so young, so much at least as I always have done, that I could n't fairly take in the idea. The giftie has n't been gied me to see myself as others see me. Even yet, when they get up to offer me the great chair, I can't understand it. But at length I have come so far into their views as seriously to ask myself what it is fit for an old man to do or undertake. And I have come to the conclusion that the best thing for me is to be quiet, to keep at least to my quiet and customary method of living, — in other words, to be at home.

ORVILLE DEWEY.

Our minds get tricks and attitudes as our bodies do, and age stiffens them into unalterableness.

GEORGE ELIOT.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear ;
Heaven were not heaven if we knew what it were.

SUCKLING.

In the inmost chambers of my soul
There is another world, a blessed home
O'er which no living power holdeth control,
Anigh to which ill things do never come.
There shineth the glad sunshine of clear thought,
With hope and faith holding communion
high,
Over a fragrant land with flowers in-wrought,

Where gush the living springs of poesy.
There speak the voices that I love to hear,
There smile the glances that I love to see,
There live the forms of those my soul holds dear,
Forever, in that secret world with me.
They who have walked with me along life's way,
Have severed been by fortune's adverse tide,
Who ne'er again through time's uncertain
 day,
In weal or woe, may wander by my side ;
They all dwell here : nor these, whom life alone Divideth from me, but the dead, the dead ; —
Those weary ones who to their rest are gone,
Whose footprints from the earth have vanished ;
Here dwell they all.

FANNY A. KEMBLE.

The first question one needs to ask of his own soul is not (what many insist upon asking), "Can I see any certainty that this life is to be prolonged after death?" Great numbers of people demand an answer to that question first of all, and are ready to make an oracle of any kind of affirmative response ; though they can never know true peace of mind with their faith so insecurely founded. The first question to be put is, " Can I trust my life, and the lives of those who are dear to me, to that great Power which called them into being ? Am I sure that the laws and changes He has ordained are right and just ? Do I know that wherever He carries me, it is best for me to go, and that my final destiny is in the keeping of One infinitely better qualified to judge for me, than I to judge for myself ? " Let each soul ask of itself these questions, knowing that while they remain unanswered, all faith beyond them, of which it may fancy itself possessed, is but a broken reed, and that its first concern is to win back its childlike heart of faith and trust toward that great heart and soul of all things upon which it is sheltered and sustained.

HOWARD N. BROWN.

Threescore and ten ! Welcome the goal !
Time cuts no notches on the soul,
Only the body feels his blade.
Man is of spirit-fibre made.

Threescore and ten ! What blessings rare,
How deep, how rich, how sweet, how fair,
Are circled by that olden span
That notes the earthly life of man !

Threescore and ten ! No iron gate
Is shut and locked by cruel fate ;
But golden gates are open set,
Leading to greener pastures yet.

Threescore and ten ! What though the eye
Grow dim to things that near us lie,
The lengthening vision, looking far,
Sees light beyond the farthest star.

Threescore and ten ! What though the ear Refuses every voice to hear,
'Tis but to listen, calm and still,
To voices of His whispered will.

Threescore and ten ! This Pisgah height Brings the old promised land in sight,
Whose clusters rich of love and truth
Yield nectar of immortal youth.

W. P. TILDEN.

He was never a laudator temporis acti,

nor ever affirmed that the former days were better than these. Quite otherwise. He was always ready with examples from his own memory to prove the exact contrary. He did not live in the past as many old men do. Perhaps one reason for his retaining his mental vigor so long and so well, was owing to the intenseness with which he lived in the day which was passing over his head.

EDMUND QUINCY'S LIFE OF JOSIAH QUINCY.

I have in hand my seventh book of antiquities; I am collecting all the materials of our early history; of all the famous causes which I have defended, I am now completing the pleadings; I am employed on the law of augurs, of pontiffs, of citizens. I am much engaged also in Greek literature, and, after the manner of the Pythagoreans, for the purpose of exercising my memory, I call to mind in the evening what I have said, heard, and done on each day. These are the exercises of the understanding; these are the race-courses of the mind; whilst I am perspiring and toiling over these, I do not greatly miss my strength of body. I attend my friends, I come into the senate very often, and spontaneously bring forward things much and long thought of, and I maintain them by strength of mind, not of body ; and if I were unable to perform these duties, yet my couch would afford me amusement, when reflecting on those matters which I was no longer able to do, — but that I am able is owing to my past life : for, by a person who always lives in these pursuits and labors, it is not perceived when old age steals on. Thus gradually and unconsciously life declines into old age ; nor is its thread suddenly broken, but the vital principle is consumed by time.

CICERO.

David and I are growing old. He will be eighty in three weeks, and I was seventy-two last February. But we keep young in our feelings. We are in fact like two old children ; as much interested as ever in the birds and the wild-flowers, and with sympathies as lively as ever in all that concerns the welfare of the world. Our habitual mood is serene and cheerful. The astonishing activity of evil sometimes makes me despondent for a while, but my belief returns as strong as ever, that there is more good than evil in the world, and that the All-wise Being is guiding the good to certain victory.

LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

“I yield it just,” said Adam, “and submit.

But is there yet no other way, besides
These painful passages, how we may come To death, and mix with our connatural dust?”

“There is,” said Michael, “if thou well observe

The rule of Not too much, by temperance taught,

In what thou eat’st and drink’st ; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight,
Till many years over thy head return :
So may’st thou live, till, like ripe fruit thou drop

Into thy mother’s lap ; or be with ease Gathered, not harshly plucked, for death mature ;

This is old age.

JOHN MILTON.

When age advances, may we grow
In faith, and hope, and love ;
And walk in holiness below,
To holiness above.

When earthly joys and cares depart,
Desire and envy cease ; —
Be thou the portion of our heart ;
In thee may we have peace.

JAMES MONTGOMERY.

Marham. But, indeed, I am often distressed at being so useless in my old age.

Aubin. Useless ! You are of great use, Uncle Stephen, you really are. How are you useful ? By being a man that is old. Your old age is a public good ; it is, indeed. For out of all the boys and girls, and young men and women of this neighborhood, probably not ten, and perhaps not even one, will ever be as old as you. But something of the good of old age they may all get, through sympathy with you. No child ever listens to your talk without having a good done it that no schooling could do. When you are walking, no one ever opens a gate for you to pass through, and no one ever honors you with any kind of help, without being himself the better for what he does ; for fellow-feeling with you ripens his soul for him.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

Knowing God's own time is best,
In a patient hope I rest
For the full day breaking.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown ;
Only waiting till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is flown :
Till the light of earth is faded
From the heart once full of day ;
Till the stars of heaven are breaking Through the twilight soft and gray.

Only waiting till the reapers
Have the last sheaf gathered home ;
For the summer-time is faded,
And the autumn winds have come.
Quickly, reapers ! gather quickly
These last ripe hours of my heart,
For the bloom of life is withered,
And I hasten to depart.

Only waiting till the angels
Open wide the mystic gate,
At whose feet I long have lingered,
Weary, poor, and desolate ;
Even now I hear the footsteps,
And their voices far away ;

If they call me, I am waiting,
Only waiting to obey.

Only waiting till the shadows
Are a little longer grown ;
Only waiting till the glimmer
Of the day's last beam is flown.
Then from out the gathered darkness
Holy, deathless stars shall rise,
By whose light my soul shall gladly Tread its pathway to the skies.

FRANCES L. MACB.

When I am in company with the young, I endeavor, as far as my station and time of life will permit, to assimilate my manners to theirs, and I find two good effects from it: one, that they listen with much more pleasure and attention to any advice I may see occasion to offer; the other, that I prevent, what is far more odious than any wrinkles of the body, — those wrinkles of the mind, as Montaigne terms them, which are so destructive of the virtues of the heart, and of the intellectual features.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

I find the proof of age coming upon me.
I used to walk over the pebbles in my path without stopping to take breath ; now I consider them, and sit down to rest when I have got over one or two. "As much as I can do that day," I tell myself.

CHARLOTTE WILLIAMS-WYNN.

One incident of our excursion to Stonehenge had a significance for me, which renders it memorable in my personal experience. As we drove over the barren plain, one of the party suddenly exclaimed, "Look ! Look ! See the lark rising !" I looked up with the rest. There was the bright blue sky, but not a speck upon it which my eyes could distinguish. Again, one called out, "Hark ! Hark ! Hear him singing !" I listened, but not a sound reached my ear. Was it strange that I felt a momentary pang ? Those that look out at the windows are darkened, and all the daughters of music are laid low. Was I never to see or hear the soaring songster at heaven's gate — unless — unless — if our mild humanized theology promises truly, I may perhaps hereafter listen to him singing far down beneath me ? For in whatever world I find myself, I hope I shall always love our poor little spheroid, so long my home, which some kind angel may point out to me as a gilded globule swimming in the sunlight far away. After walking the streets of pure gold in the New Jerusalem, might one not like a short vacation, to visit the well - remembered green fields and flowery meadows? I had a very sweet emotion of self-pity, which took the sting out of my painful discovery that the orchestra of my pleasing life-entertainment was unstringing its instruments, and its lights were being extinguished, — that the show was almost over.

All this I kept to myself, of course, except as far as I whispered it to the unseen presence which we all feel is in sympathy with us, and which, as it seemed to my fancy, was looking into my eyes, and through them into my soul, with the tender, tearful smile of a mother who for the first time gently presses back the longing lips of her yet unweaned infant.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

As we discipline the mind in moral endeavor, by compelling it to speak the language and practise the deeds of virtue, though many of its impulses run at first in contrary directions, so it is proper to school ourselves in the speech and bearing of spiritual trust and courage, till our doubts and fears can be outgrown.

HOWARD N. BROWN.

Mr. Lyttelton. I have heard, my Lord Bishop, some old men complain of want of respect. Has that been considered by your Lordship, or do you not estimate it among the inconveniences of advanced life?

Bishop Hough. I do not so estimate it. The evil lies in man, not in the period of life. The cheerful and obliging, however aged, will always receive respect and attention: while the fretful and querulous, the morose and gloomy, the sordid and avaricious, will not find respect and attention at any period of life. I was, indeed, prepared to mention the deference paid to age, among its advantages: and in good sooth I consider it as a balance for some of the pleasures of youth.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

What a blessing it is, my dear friend, that one's love of nature increases with age, and as other enjoyments fade away, that becomes more keen and satisfying.

CHARLOTTE WILLIAMS-WYNN.

Alone! to land upon that shore!
With no one sight that we have seen before, —

Things of a different hue,
And sounds all strange and new,
No forms of earth our fancies to arrange, —
But to begin alone that mighty change!

Alone! to land upon that shore!
Knowing so well we can return no more;
No voice or face of friend,
None with us to attend
Our disembarking on that awful strand, —
But to arrive alone in such a land!

Alone? No! God hath been there long before,
Eternally hath waited on that shore
For us who were to come
To our eternal home:
O is He not the life-long friend we know
More privately than any friend below?

Alone? The God we trust is on that shore,
The faithful One, whom we have trusted more
In trials and in woes
Than we have trusted those

On whom we leaned most in our earthly strife ;

O we shall trust Him more in that new life !

So not alone we land upon that shore :
'T will be as though we had been there
before ;

We shall meet more we know
Than we can meet below,
And find our rest like some returning dove, —

Our home at once with the Eternal Love !

FREDERICK WILLIAM FABER.

Live long and happy, and in that thought die,

Glad for what was !

ROBERT BROWNING.

To know our dear friends again is not a fantastical nor an unreasonable wish ; it is a hope that is quite rational, and altogether natural to us, as loving and thinking and immortal souls. Our nature is not our own making, but God's. Our souls are made so as to long and hope for sight of the lost ; and so naturally do they do so, that it is as though God made them do it. So I cannot doubt our having our friends again.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

If I cease to love those whom I once loved ; if I cease to love them with a definite, positive, special love, I cease to be myself.

MADAME DE GASPARIN.

Short is the little that remains to thee of life. Live as on a mountain. For it makes no difference whether a man lives here or there, if he lives everywhere in the world as in a civil community. Let men see, let them know, a real man, who lives as he was meant to live.

MARCUS AURELIUS.

'Neath the stately tree whose branches over-arch the narrow way,
He lifts with painful effort a head where falls the gray
Of life's twilight, deepening into night,
To the boughs ; — the green leaves, only Brief summer friends, — left lonely
To brave the winter's might.

Deep feeling in his aged breast by that lone tree is stirred, Till his thought his soul o'erfills and overflows in word ; —
“ When my life was in its prime,
Blessings God had planted for me

Grew and threw a shadow o'er me,
Like thy leaves in summer time.

“But joyful, all unheeding of the heaven wherein they grew,
They, the blessings branching o'er me, drew and limited my view ;
Friends whose love would brook no doubt,
Wife and children to me cleaving,
As thy leaves so thick inweaving,
Shut the blessed sunlight out.

“But they fell as fell thy leaves, when came the autumn wind,
Like thy leaves soon few remained, frail quivering behind ;
While from Him that caused them fly,
Rays of light from each that failed me,
Pierced the darkness that enveiled me ;
Now I look upon the sky.”

JOHN B. FELTON.

It were worth a man's while to consider, whether his present temper of mind be such as he would be willing to possess as long as he lives. And if, upon reflection, he finds his soul overspread with malice, pride, envy, avarice, injustice, or any other vice, let him consider whether that be the state he desires it should be in when it leaves his body. If it be, let him acknowledge himself an atheist ; if it be not, let him own himself a fool, and endeavor to grow wiser as soon as he can.

CHARLES HOW.

He whose life has been filled with good deeds need not be afraid of finding old age wearisome.

FROM THE PERSIAN.

Gone Youth ! had I thus missed thee, nor a hope

Were left of thy return beyond the tomb, I could curse life :— But glorious is the scope

Of an immortal soul. — O Death, thy gloom
Short, and already tinged with coming light,

Is to the Christian but a summer's night.

JOSEPH BLANCO WHITE.

The infirmities of age [may be confined] within a much smaller circle than is commonly estimated ; leaving little more than what is necessary to wean us from a world which, with all our complainings, we are apt to love too well, and to prepare for the close of life, in the same manner as the weariness, which we feel at the end of a cheerful and active day, fits us for quiet and calm repose.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

Remember, if you please, that I am sixty-five. I am, as it happens, particularly fond of being left at peace, and of not having my daily life interfered with. Peace, and her own way, are the two possessions which a woman of my age craves, and which she has a right, I hold, to insist upon.

HON. EMILY LAWLESS.

When death gives us a long lease of life, it takes as hostages all those whom we have loved.

MME. NECKER.

Good, to forgive;
Best, to forget!
Living, we fret;
Dying, we live.
Fretless and free,
Soul, clap thy pinion!
Earth have dominion,
Body, o'er thee!

Wander at will,
Day after day, —

Wander away, Wandering still —
Soul that can'st soar !
Body may slumber :
Body shall cumber
Soul-flight no more.

Waft of soul's wing !
What lies above ?
Sunshine and Love,
Sky-blue and spring !
Body hides where ?
Ferns of all feather,
Mosses and heather,
Yours be the care !

ROBERT BROWNING.

It is a melancholy thing to find our glass almost run out, with only a few sands left at the bottom ; for we have been used to consider time as our most precious treasure ; we have pleased ourselves with the thought of having a plentiful stock before us, and we must needs be dejected when that pleasure is wrested from us, and we see it shrunk almost to nothing, however careless we have been of it while not sensibly perceiving its decay.

We have indeed a small allowance of it dealt us here, and much we have to do with it ; and we should therefore husband it well, that we may lose none of those advantages and innocent amusements for which it was given us. But though our time here is soon over, yet time itself is not exhausted, having the boundless ocean of eternity from whence to replenish his glass, larger than all the sands of the Atlantic, the Pacific, and all other seas together. Having then such an immense estate of time, we need not grudge the expense of fifty or a hundred years irrecoverably gone from us : for this trifling diminution no more leaves us the poorer, than a man worth ten thousand a year would be the poorer for having lost a sixpence. Whoever bears this reflection in mind will not wish to recall the years that are passed over him, nor be so apt, as many people are, to complain that they see the rising generation growing up to shove them out of the world. The great boys do not make this complaint, because younger ones are perpetually coming in to supply their places ; nor do travellers complain, on setting out again after having baited at an inn, when they see other company coming in to take the commodious room and refreshments which they are going to resign.

ABRAHAM TUCKER.

When trembling limbs refuse their weight,
And films, slow gathering, dim the sight,
And clouds obscure the mental sight,
'T is nature's precious boon to die.

ANNA LÆTITIA BARBAULD.

But Life is sweet, though all that makes it sweet Lessen like sound of friends' departing feet,
And Death is beautiful as feet of friend Coming with welcome at our journey's end ; . . .
I muse upon the margin of the sea,
Our common pathway to the new To Be,
Watching the sails that lessen more and
more,
Of good and beautiful embarked before ;
With bits of wreck I patch the boat shall bear
Me to that unexhausted Otherwhere, Whose friendly-peopled shore I sometimes see,
By soft mirage uplifted, beckon me,

Nor sadly hear, as lower sinks the sun,
My moorings to the past snap, one by one.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The longer we live the stronger those ties become which attract us toward another world, and the fewer and the weaker those that attach us to this. Faith and hope then become essential parts of our nature, and thus we gain more than we lose.

ROBERT SOUTHEY.

His [the old man's] affections now are greater than before ; yet it is not the mere power of instinctive affection — the conubial instinct which loves a mate, or the parental instinct which loves a child ; but a general, human, reflective, volitional love, not sharpened by animal desire, not narrowed by affiliated bounds, but coming of his freedom, not his bondage. Of mere instinctive affection he has perhaps less than before. That fades with the age which needs it, as the blossom falls when the fruit is set, and the leaves when it has grown. With this pure human affection he loves his venerable wife better than before ; she him : they have been rising in love these sixty or seventy summers.

Once, in their spring of life their connubial love bloomed passion-red; then it grew to summer beauty; now it is autumn ripe, it is all affection; there is no romance; passion is gone. It is affection ripened by half a hundred years of use and wont; a gradual marriage sloping up to a complete wedlock of the man and woman. Now the two are one; dualism is unified in a long life. This unity and its joy — that is God's benediction on a true marriage, fifty years a-making. All the wife's spiritual womanhood is his; all the spiritual manhood of the husband is hers. Neither has lost; both have won; each has gained the whole value of what was exchanged in this matrimonial barter.

THEODORE PARKER.

Yes; we go gently down the hill of life
And thank our God at every step we go.
The husband lover and the sweetheart wife.
Of weeping age, what do we care or know?
Each says to each, "Our fourscore years thrice told,
Would leave us young." The soul is never old!

What is the grave to us? Can it divide

The destiny of two, by God made one?
We step across and reach the other side,
To know our blended life is but begun.
These fading faculties are sent to say
Heaven is more near to-day than yesterday.

S. C. HALL.¹

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them; while the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain: in the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened, and the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall rise up at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of music shall be laid low; also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond-tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets: or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

¹ On the fifty-fourth anniversary of his marriage.

ECCLESIASTES, XII. 1-8.

Growing old is like bodily existence refining away into spiritual life. True, the ripeness of the soul is hidden in the decay of the body; but so is many a ripe fruit in its husk.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

To outlive my senses, may it not be my fate,

To be blind, to be deaf, to know nothing at all;

But rather let death come before 't is too late,

And while there's some sap in it, may my tree fall.

Chorus. May I govern my passions with an absolute sway,

And grow wiser and better, as my strength wears away,

Without gout or stone, by a gentle decay.

WALTER POPE, The Wish.

If the thermometer would only keep pace with our years after sixty, it would be very comfortable ; for I suppose a man of ninety would not have any serious objections to keep his thermometer at that level.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

He (Stein) was then a believer. He did not merely, like his contemporaries Goethe and W. v. Humboldt, look forward with hope to a future life : this indeed he did as a matter of course, and it may be remarked that he did it without effort, not as one who bears up manfully against misgivings, but easily and habitually. To him death is always the entrance to a better state of existence ; as he approaches it he is gladdened not by the thought that it will relieve him of a load of weariness, but by the hope of glorious things to be revealed by it. When the bright valley of the Lahn, stretched out under his Burg, pleased his aged eye, he murmured, "How much more beautiful will it be yonder !"

. . . When he felt the approach of old age, he writes to a friend that he feels tired of life, but he adds that he yearns to be reunited to the loved ones who have laid down the burden before him.

J. R. SEELEY, Life and Times of Stein.

Yes, little prattlers, you may fancy heaven
A sky forever blue — a laughing sun
That knows no flitting shadows — a fair lawn

Besprinkled with your favorite flowers, and birds

Pouring around their gushing melodies ;
And you, and this soft little one, and me,
Sitting as we sit now, but all enwrap
With lustrous beauty and unearthly light.
Thus now ; — but you will grow, and then your fancy

Will alter, and your heaven no more be this,

But the lone walk with one whom love hath knit

Into your very soul ; while nightingale From blos'my hawthorn's heart awakes the night

To praise — and o'er ye both, from myriad stars,

The mighty presence of the Eternal Love

Falls, as the dewy odors on the air,
The incense of the temple where ye roam.
Then life perchance will change afresh ;
 and love
Be reft of its support, and stand alone ;
And then your heaven will be a loftier
 thing,
A gazing on the open face of God, —
Knowledge and light, and the unbounded sea
Of presences seraphic. Then, my child, Life will go onward yet, and will become Labor and sorrow, and your beauty-dreams Will have passed by, and all your high desires
Have sunk away ; — and then your heaven will be Wherever there is rest ; and so the way Down to the grave — a thing you love not now —
Will be smoothed off and altered as it nears,
Till you shall e'en desire it for its sake.

HENRY ALFORD.

There's a sore trial in middle life, Sally.
Hearts grow cold with care, and the life
He gives too often seems buried, because of the load of earthly thought above it ;

and then we appear to ourselves to live to this world, whilst the things of this crowd upon us, in church, and in prayer, and when we open our Bibles to read. But where the will is steadfast, and sin withstood, the true life springs forth again as the earthly tabernacle decays. Old age is a blessed time. It gives us leisure to put off our earthly garments one by one, and dress ourselves for heaven.

E. M. SEWELL.

Thou unrelenting Past !
Strong are the barriers round thy dark domain,
And fetters, sure and fast,
Hold all that enter thy unbreathing reign.

Thou hast my better years,
Thou hast my earlier friends — the good,
the kind,
Yielded to thee with tears —
The venerable form — the exalted mind.

Thine for a space are they,
Yet shalt thou yield thy treasures up at last ;
Thy gates shall yet give way,
Thy bolts shall fall, inexorable Past !

All shall come back, each tie
Of pure affection shall be knit again ;
Alone shall Evil die,
And Sorrow dwell a prisoner in thy reign.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

No one remembers when he was born, consequently we never know when we have grown old.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

It is being quite too ingenuous to maintain that even if this world is not counter-balanced by another, the man who has sacrificed himself for goodness or truth, ought to leave it content, and to absolve the gods. No ; if this is so, he has a right to curse them ! For, why impose upon his credulity in this manner ? Why place within him these misleading instincts of which he has been the honest dupe ? Why put this premium upon the frivolous and wicked ? Is he then, who does not indulge in self-deception, the man of discernment ? If this be so, cursed be the gods who have bestowed their favors in such a partial fashion ! I can consent to the future being an enigma, but if there is no future, this life is a frightful fraud.

You will observe that our desires are not those of the vulgar herd. We do not wish to see the punishment of the guilty, nor to draw interest upon our own hoarded virtues. Neither are our cravings selfish ones. We only desire to continue to exist, so that we may keep up our affinities with the light, to carry on still farther the thought that we have begun, to learn more about it, to some day enjoy that truth which we have sought with such struggles, to see the triumph of the good we have loved. Surely nothing can be more legitimate.

ERNEST RENAN.

Ah, nothing is too late Till the tired heart shall cease to palpitate.
Cato learned Greek at eighty ; Sophocles
Wrote his grand Œdipus, and Simonides Bore off the prize of verse from his com-peers,
When each had numbered more than fourscore years,
And Theophrastus, at fourscore and ten,
Had but begun his Characters of Men.
Chaucer, at Woodstock with the nightin-gales,
At sixty, wrote the Canterbury Tales ;

Goethe at Weimar, toiling to the last,
Completed Faust when eighty years were passed.

These are indeed exceptions, but they show How far the gulf-stream of our youth may flow

Into the Arctic regions of our lives,
Where little else but life itself survives.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

If thou wilt be fearless of death, endeavor to be in love with the felicities of saints and angels, and be once persuaded to believe that there is a condition of living better than this ; that there are creatures more noble than we ; that above there is a country better than ours ; that the inhabitants know more and know better, and are in places of rest and desire ; and first learn to value it, and then learn to purchase it, and death cannot be a formidable thing, that lets us into so much joy and so much felicity. And, indeed, who would not think his condition mended if he passed from conversing with dull mortals, with ignorant and foolish persons, with tyrants and enemies of learning, to converse with Homer and Plato, with Socrates and Cicero, with Plutarch and Fabri-cius? So the heathens speculated, but we consider higher. "The dead that die in the Lord" shall converse with St. Paul, and all the college of the apostles, and all the saints and martyrs; with all the good men whose memory we preserve in honor, with excellent kings and holy bishops, and with the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, Christ Jesus, and with God Himself. For "Christ died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we might live together with Him." Then we shall be free from lust and envy, from fear and rage, from covetousness and sorrow, from tears and cowardice: and these indeed, properly, are the only evils that are contrary to felicity and wisdom. Then we shall see strange things, and know new propositions, and all things in another manner and to higher purposes.

JEREMY TAYLOR.

Signs of old age are, — a tendency to cross your hands on the top of a cane; a tendency to pick up pins from the carpet; a tendency in your hat to come down on the back of your head; a disposition to sit still. When a young man sees a mountain he says: "Let us climb it." The old man says: "Let us stay down here."

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Age makes leisure for reflection whether we wish it or not.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

My friend, thou sorrowest for thy golden prime,

For thy fair youthful years too swift of flight ;

Thou musest with wet eyes upon the time
Of cheerful hopes that filled the world with light, —

Years when thy heart was bold, thy hand was strong,

And quick the thought that moved thy tongue to speak,

And willing faith was thine, and scorn of wrong

Summoned the sudden crimson to thy cheek.

Thou lookest forward on the coming days, Shuddering to feel their shadow o'er thee creep ;

A path, thick-set with changes and decays, Slopes downward to the place of common sleep ;

And they who walked with thee in life's first stage,

Leave one by one thy side, and, waiting near,

Thou seest the sad companions of thy age —

Dull love of rest, and weariness and fear.

Yet grieve thou not, nor think thy youth is gone,

Nor deem that glorious season e'er could die.

Thy pleasant youth, a little while withdrawn,

Waits on the horizon of a brighter sky ;
Waits like the morn, that folds her wing and hides,

Till the slow stars bring back her dawning hour ;

Waits like the vanished spring, that slumbering bides

Her own sweet time to waken bud and flower.

There shall He welcome thee, when thou shalt stand

On His bright morning hills, with smiles more sweet

Than when at first He took thee by the hand,

Through the fair earth to lead thy tender
feet.

He shall bring back, but brighter, broader still,

Life's early glory to thine eyes again,
Shall clothe thy spirit with new strength, and fill

Thy leaping heart with warmer love than then.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The number of a man's days at the most are an hundred years. As a drop of water unto the sea, and a gravel stone in comparison of the sand, so are a thousand years to the days of eternity.

ECCLESIASTICUS.

Study is the bane of boyhood, the aliment of youth, the indulgence of manhood, and the restorative of old age.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

The pain of erring, — the bitterest in the world, — is it not strange it should be so bitter? Is it not strange that growth must be attained on such hard terms?
Nay, but is it not simply applying the sharpest instrument to the cutting and carving of the finest and grandest form of things on earth, — a noble character ?

The work is but begun on earth. Man is the only being in this world whose nature is not half developed, whose powers are in their infancy ; the ideal in whose constitution is not yet, and never on earth, realized. The animal arrives at animal perfection here, — becomes all that it was made to be. The beetle, the dragon-fly, the eagle, is as perfect as it can be. But man comes far short of the ideal that presided over his formation. Any way it would be unaccountable, not to say incredible, that God's highest work on earth should fail of its end, fail of realizing its ideal, fail of being what it was made for. But when the process, unlike that in animals, which is all facility and pleasure, is full of difficulty and pain, then for the unfinished work to be dropped would be, not as if a sculptor should go on blocking out marble statues only to throw them away half finished, but as if he should take the living human frame for his subject, and should cut and gash and torture it for years, only to fling it into the ditch.

ORVILLE DEWEY.

There comes a time to all when work is done
And life's long day draws near the set of sun :
We sigh for home, and, groping, find before
Our straining eyes a dark and shadowy door.

Men call it death, and speak of it in fear
And doubt and sorrow, saying, " It is here
We part with all life's light and joy, and go To endless sleep or age-long bitter woe."

Unreasoning fear ! What though the door is dark ?
Faith's angel swings it open wide, and — hark !
Voices in old, loved accents bid me come ;
And all heaven's light shines through, and heaven is home.

HERBERT WHITNEY.

Old age is not so much a scene of illness as a malaise.

SYDNEY SMITH.

Our expectation of a better world beyond will be reasonable and helpful in exact proportion as our lives are becoming deeper, more real, richer and purer, by the converse and discipline of earth and time. We want to build up a heavenly being, — not that little life which may well be rounded by the last deep sleep, but the heart which may well live forever ; we want to gather heavenly treasure, which as it increases day by day is the earnest of the heavenly country where they who have been faithful in a few things shall be made rulers over many things. There are pauses in the busiest lives, times of weariness and of age, seasons of bereavement and of loneliness, when we inevitably look forward and strain our eyes to pierce the thick veil. We would have, if it be possible, some foregleams of immortality ; but in this, as in all else which concerns our deepest life, the light beyond is conditioned upon the light within, and we see what we bring means of seeing. The good that we would lay hold of beyond and above must get its body and form from the divinest good and the purest blessedness of earth ; there must be a reality of friendship here and now to prophesy of a recognition of friends in that world to come, deathless aims and expectations for those who dare talk of immortality, a God of all hope there, because we have learned to believe in a God of all hope here.

RUFUS ELLIS.

So live, that when thy summons comes to join

The innumerable caravan, that moves To that mysterious realm, where each shall take

His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not like the quarry-slave at night, Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed

By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave, Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch

About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

O Death, acceptable is thy sentence unto the needy, and unto him whose strength faileth, that is now in the last age, and is vexed with all things, and him that despaireth and hath lost patience !

ECCLESIASTICUS.

Old age is the majestic and imposing dome of human life. God makes it the sanctuary of all wisdom and justice, the tabernacle of the purest virtues. Experience has taught the old man all things ; and his personal endeavors have reduced his acquirements to that simple state, — that perfect unity, — where each conviction has its proof and counter-proof. His are the treasures of tradition, and those of acquired knowledge, — ancient lore and modern facts, in their order, practical truth, and eternal verity, the relative and the absolute, — that which helps our conduct in this world, and that which leads us to another.

MADAME SWETCHINE.

Whatever poet, orator, or sage
May say of it, old age is still old age.
It is the waning, not the crescent moon ;
The dusk of evening, not the blaze of noon ;
It is not strength, but weakness ; not desire,
But its surcease ; not the fierce heat of fire,
The burning and consuming element,
But that of ashes and of embers spent,
In which some living sparks we still discern,
Enough to warm, but not enough to burn.
What then ? Shall we sit idly down and say

The night hath come ; it is no longer day ?
The night hath not yet come ; we are not quite

Cut off from labor by the failing light ;
Something remains for us to do or dare ;
Even the oldest tree some fruit may bear ;
Not Ædipus Coloneus, or Greek Ode,
Or tales of pilgrims that one morning rode
Out of the gateway of the Tabard Inn,
But other something, would we but begin ;
For age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress,
And as the evening twilight fades away
The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

It is not by vigorous discipline, and unrelaxing austerity, that the aged can maintain an ascendant over youthful minds. The constraint which their presence will impose, and the aversion which their manners will create, if the one be constantly awful, and the other severe, tend to frustrate the effect of all their wisdom. They must assume the spirit of the companion, and the friend ; and mix with the authority of age, a proper degree of indulgence to the manners of the young. Instead of lessening the respect due to their years by such condescension, they take the surest method to increase it. Old age never appears with greater dignity than, when tempered by mildness, and enlivened with good humor, it acts as the guide and the patron of youth.

HUGH BLAIR.

Lo, the old man there
Is like a slumberer ; a slumberer
Is like a bucket full of precious wine,
Which one sets by in a cool, quiet place, Hedged round with ice, — to freeze. And whatsoe'er
Man has within, poured into him by life,
The evil part all freezes out to ice,
All vulgar, common, bitter, foreign stuff, —
And in the centre is condensed the virtue Of days, — of life.

LEOPOLD SCHREFFER.¹

My liberty is only negative. Nobody has any hold over me, but many things have become impossible to me, and if I were so foolish as to wish for them, the limits of my liberty would soon become apparent. Therefore I take care not to wish for them, and not to let my thoughts dwell on them. I only desire what I am able for, and in this way I run my head against no wall, I cease even to be conscious of the boundaries which enclose me. I take care to wish for rather less than is in my power, that I may not even be reminded of the obstacles in my way.

¹ Layman's Breviary, translated from the German by C. T. Brooks.

H. F. AMIEL.

To raise the great oak-trees of human righteousness you want a deep, rich soil, and threescore, fourscore, fivescore summers and winters for the tree to grow in, broadly buttressed below, broad-branched above, to wrestle with the winds, and take the sunshine of God's heaven on its top. And that is the value of long life — it is an opportunity to grow great and ripen through.

THEODORE PARKER.

Life ! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part ;
And when, or where, or how we met,
I own to me 's a secret yet.
But this I know, when thou art fled,
Where'er they lay these limbs, this head,
No clod so valueless shall be,
As all that then remains of me.

O whither, whither dost thou fly,
Where bend unseen thy trackless course,
 And in this strange divorce,
Ah, tell where must I seek this compound I?

To the vast ocean of empyreal flame,
From whence thy essence came,
Dost thou thy flight pursue, when freed
From matter's base encumbering weed?
 Or dost thou, hid from sight,
 Wait, like some spell-bound knight,
Through blank oblivious years th' appointed hour,
To break thy trance and reassume thy power?
Yet canst thou without thought or feeling be?
O say what art thou, when no more thou 'rt thee?

Life! we've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are
 dear;
Perhaps 't will cost a sigh, a tear;
 Then steal away, give little warning,

Choose thine own time ;
Say not Good - night, but in some brighter clime Bid me Good-morning.

ANNA LÆTITIA BARBAULD.

But here again age has its advantages : and I must observe, as to the actual pain of death to the aged, that in a state of maturity the fruit drops spontaneously from the tree ; and the separation of the immortal soul from the mortal body is of course less painful than in early life.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

It is not pleasant to think upon death. It would not be pleasant to any company of friends to think that the hour for parting was near. Death is a solemn and painful dispensation. I will have no hallucination about it. I "wait the great teacher, Death." I do not welcome it. It is a solemn change. It is a dread change to natures like ours. I do not believe that the Great Disposer meant that we should approach it with a smile, with an air of triumph, — with any other than feelings of lowly submission and trust. I do not want to die. I never knew anybody that did, except when bitter pain or great and irremediable unhappiness made the release welcome. . . .

Do you feel that I am not writing to you in the high Christian strain? Perhaps not. But I confess I am accustomed to bring all that is taught me—all that is said in exceptional circumstances like those of the apostles—into some adjustment with a natural, necessary, and universal experience. Besides, Jesus himself did not approach death with a song of triumph upon his lips. What a union in him of sorrow and trust! No defying of pain, no boasting of calmness or strength, no braving of martyrdom,—not half so fine and grand, to a worldly and superficial view, as many a martyr's death! But oh, what a blending in him of everything that makes perfection,—of pain and patience, of trial and trust!

ORVILLE DEWEY.

All I have seen teaches me to trust the Creator for all that I have not seen.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Since Nature's works be good, and death doth serve As Nature's work, why should we fear to die?

Since fear is vain but when it may preserve,

Why should we fear that which we cannot fly?

Fear is more pain than is the pain it fears, Disarming human minds of native might ;
While each conceit an ugly figure bears
Which were not evil, well viewed in rea-son's light.

Our owly eyes, which dimmed with passion be,

And scarce discern the dawn of coming
day,

Let them be clearèd, and begin to see
Our life is but a step in dusty way.

Then let us hold the bliss of peaceful mind ;

Since this we feel, great loss we cannot find.

SIR PHILIP SYDNEY.

It is indeed of no avail to speculate and imagine what specially the modes of our celestial being shall be ; nevertheless, we must not allow ourselves in any narrowness, or fail to believe that great things await us beyond the veil. Only yesterday we were not at all. To-day what wonders of being encompass us, what miracles of divine art, what splendors over our heads, what beauty beneath our feet ! Will it be any more strange that we should be there under the new heavens and on the new earth than that we are here ; any more strange that we are living again, than that we have once passed out of nothing or unconsciousness ? We shall see and hear, and taste and feel ; we shall lay aside only what is earthly and bestial. What the microscope and telescope are to our terrestrial seeing, that and infinitely more shall the new eye be to our celestial seeing. How amazing will be to us, when we shall reach that heavenly shore, our incredulity, our dulness, our failure to catch at least some hints and foregleams of things to come !

RUFUS ELLIS.

Not bed-time yet ! The full-blown flower
Of all the year — this evening hour —
 With friendship's flame is bright ;
Life still is sweet, the heavens are fair, Though fields are brown and woods are bare,
And many a joy is left to share
 Before we say Good-night !

And when, our cheerful evening past,
The nurse, long waiting, comes at last,
 Ere on her lap we lie
In wearied nature's sweet repose,
At peace with all her waking foes,
Our lips shall murmur ere they close,
 Good-night ! and not Good-by !

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

I now perceive why old men repeat their stories in company. . . . When they originate nothing, they can profit their juniors by recollections of the past.

HENRY CRABB ROBINSON.

His [the old man's] religion is deeper, more inward than before. It is not doctrine alone, nor mere form. There is little rapture; he is still, and knows that God is Father and Mother of the world. His religion is love of God; faith and trust in Him; rest, tranquillity, peace for his soul. From the wide field of time, deeply labored for eighty years, he reaps a great harvest of life, and now his sheaves are with him; the eternal riches of heaven are poured into his lap. He fears nothing; he loves. His hope for this world is something small; for his immortal future he knows no bounds.

THEODORE PARKER.

Brought safely by His hand thus far,
Why wilt thou now give place to fear ?
How canst thou want, if He provide,
Or lose thy way with such a guide ? . . .
And has He not His promise passed,
That thou shalt overcome at last ?

JOHN NEWTON.

When a young man even plants an oaken forest, or lays the first stone of an edifice which will be generations in building, is it not affecting to think of his self-sacrifice for those whom he knows not, and who will never know him ? Ah, well ! the old man's life is well-nigh filled with such disinterested deeds. All his beginnings are acorns, and of none of his hopes will he see the full-grown oak.

MADAME SWETCHINE.

I can easily comprehend that an agitation of the blood, sorrow and anxiety, joined to great weakness, might produce a weariness of life, but such a feeling should be combated with all the energies of the soul. I will not insist on this as an ordinance of religion, but simply on the ground that life, even in its utmost extent, is so short, in comparison with eternity, which is wholly veiled to us as regards the nature of our being, that we must take care not to limit it by our wishes, but to allow it to continue as it will, for really the manner in which a man views his fate is more important than what his fate is.

WILLIAM VON HUMBOLDT.

Clear in memory's silent reaches Lie the pastures I have seen,
Greener than the sunlit spaces
Where the May has flung her green ;
Needs no sun, and needs no starlight
To illumine these fields of mine,
For the glory of dead faces
Is the sun, the stars that shine.

More than one I count my pastures
As my life-path groweth long ;
By their quiet waters straying
Oft I lay me, and am strong.
And I call each by its giver,
And the dear names bring to them
Glory as from shining faces
In some new Jerusalem.

Yet, O well I can remember,
Once I called my pastures Pain,
And their waters were a torrent
Sweeping through my life amain !

Now I call them Peace and Stillness, Brightness of all Happy Thought,
Where I linger for a blessing
From my faces that are nought.

Nought? I fear not. If the Power
Maketh thus His pastures green,
Maketh thus His quiet waters,
Out of waste His heavens serene,
I can trust the mighty Shepherd Loseth none He ever led;
Somewhere yet a greeting waits me
Of the faces of my dead!

WILLIAM C. GANNETT.

We shall not mind much about growing less agile and less beautiful, if we think that we are growing wiser and better.

RECREATIONS OF A COUNTRY PARSON.

O this earth, this dear, green earth, this happy earth! It will be happy and beautiful without us soon. We shall be out of the earth soon, — out of this world, but not out of its beauty. The grace that rises from the earth in many a tree; the fascination that eddies and murmurs in flowing water, keeping the gazer standing on the river side; the beauty that lives along the plain, and sometimes that draws man's outstretched hands towards itself, as though in recognition ; the loveliness that in a valley is round and over man, and embosomed in which he feels unearthly and sublimed ; the dear and fearful beauty of the lightning ; the wild grandeur of a September sunset, various, and living, and glowing ; all these we shall see again ; no, — not see ; for these things themselves we shall not see ; but what is in them we shall feel again, and drink into everlastingly. And it will be a dearer delight than it is now, and intenser and fuller. For then, O God, we shall be in Thee and of Thee ; and Thou wilt be to us like an ocean of delight, our little spirits being bathed in Thine infinite spirit.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

But grant, the virtues of a temperate prime Bless with an age exempt from scorn or crime ;
An age that melts with unperceived decay,
And glides in modest innocence away ;
Whose peaceful day benevolence endears, Whose night congratulating conscience
cheers ;

The general favorite as the general friend ;
Such age there is, and who shall wish it end ?

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

There are two things on which our highest success in life must depend. One, and indeed the great thing, is to use our opportunities while we have them. The next thing is to give them up gracefully and cheerfully when their time is ended. Instead of mourning over what is going from us, we should turn ourselves to the new opportunities which take its place, and get from them all that we can. The change is not necessarily a sad one. It may be just the allotment which is best fitted to carry us on, to teach us new lessons, to open before us new fields of usefulness and enjoyment, to exercise new faculties, to strengthen our faith, to deepen our experience of God's love, to refine and subdue our hearts, and bring us into more perfect sympathy with the divine will.

JOHN H. MORISON.

People who keep young in their minds show it in the condition of their bodies. Three fourths of our people look the old man or old woman at sixty because they have always received it as an inevitable necessity, from which there was no possible escape, that they must be on the downhill side of life at that age. It is to them a "law of nature."

It is for them only the law of ignorance. There are still a great many "laws of nature" of which we know little or nothing. To say "impossible" to the idea that people cannot live longer than the present average of life, and at the same time be strong and healthy at a "great age," is to put ourselves in the long catalogue of past dunces who said it was impossible for steam to propel cars and ships, or for electricity to carry news. Every generation finds out some new power in nature, and all of nature's unrecognized powers are not confined to the propelling of machinery.

It is a great aid to the preservation of youth and vigor to be able to sit still and keep still in mind as well as in body when there is really nothing to do, because in such condition mind and body are recuperating and filling up with new force.

MULFORD PRENTICE.

If the time comes when you must lay down the fiddle and the bow, because your fingers are too stiff, and drop the ten-foot sculls, because your arms are too weak, and, after dallying awhile with eye-glasses, come at last to the undisguised reality of spectacles, — if the time comes when that fire of life we spoke of has burned so low that where its flames reverberated there is only the sombre stain of regret, and where its coals glowed, only the white ashes that cover the embers of memory, — don't let your heart grow cold, and you may carry cheerfulness and love with you into the teens of your second century, if you can last so long.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Spring still makes spring in the mind
When sixty years are told ;
Love wakes anew this throbbing heart
And we are never old.

Over the winter glaciers,
I see the summer glow
And through the wild-piled snow-drift,
The warm rose-buds below.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Devoted two hours to the reading, and even study, of a paper on "Cold, in its Influence on Age," according to a law which Dr. Richardson has fully ascertained. At thirty, when a man at his full maturity ceases to grow, the effect of cold may be represented by one ; at thirty-nine, by two ; at forty-eight, by four ; at fifty-seven, by eight ; at sixty-six, by sixteen ; at seventy-five, by thirty-two.

In the strictness of a precise statement there seems something ridiculous in this ; but the tone of the M. D. is impressive, and, loosely speaking, my personal experience would confirm it. I enjoyed cold when young ; now it indisposes me to everything out of doors.

HENRY CRABB ROBINSON.

We approach truth only in the proportion as we are farther from life.

SOCRATES.

Let a man be of good cheer about his soul, who has cast away the pleasures and ornaments of the body as alien to him, and hurtful rather in their effects, and has followed after the pleasures of knowledge in this life ; who has arrayed the soul in her own proper jewels, which are temperance, and justice, and courage, and nobility, and truth — thus adorned she is ready to go on her journey to the world below, when her hour comes.

SOCRATES in Plato's Phædo.

Why time appears to fly more rapidly in old age than youth is ingeniously accounted for by Soame Jenyns. Each year is compared with the whole life. The twentieth at one time, is the seventeenth at another, and that, of course, appears less ; but, in fact, there is perhaps this real difference, that in a given time one does less in old age.

HENRY CRABB ROBINSON.

It matters not how long we live, but how.

PHILIP J. BAILEY.

Never, my heart, wilt thou grow old !
My hair is white, my blood runs cold,
And one by one my powers depart,
But youth sits smiling in my heart.

Down-hill the path of age ? Oh, no ;
Up, up with patient steps I go ;
I watch the skies fast brightening there,
I breathe a sweeter, purer air.

Beside my road small tasks spring up,
Though but to hand the cooling cup,

Speak the true word of hearty cheer,
Tell the lone soul that God is near.

Beat on, my heart ; and grow not old !
And when thy pulses all are told,
Let me, though working, loving still,
Kneel as I meet my Father's will.

LOUISA JANE HALL.

Marham. The decay of the mind is very distressing to witness. To know that very probably your own or some friend's mind will be enfeebled by old age —

Aubin. Mind, mind enfeebled ! Body, you mean, dear uncle. Mend the decaying body, and the mind would show itself again. It is not the soul, but only the manifestation of it, that fails with the brain. My hands are palsied, and I cannot use them ; but my mind is as lively as ever. My brain is torpid, and is useless for thinking, but my soul may be the same as ever. An aged relative of mine had been childish for many years, and knew none of her family. But, for an hour or two before she died she was herself again, and she knew all her friends and asked after her absent children. And through her watery eyes and blank expression, her soul looked out on the world again as loving, and knowing, and peaceful as ever. That I myself saw. . . . It is a great thing for us to be sure sometimes, that, though the soul is darkened, it is not put out. And if we see for ourselves that the soul can be eclipsed, and yet shine on again, then we can so easily trust how the shadow of death will pass over it, if righteous, only to leave it shining forth as the sun in the kingdom of our Father.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

Mysterious Night! when our first parent knew

Thee from divine report, and heard thy name,

Did he not tremble for this lovely frame,
This glorious canopy of light and blue?

Yet, 'neath a curtain of translucent dew, Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame,

Hesperus with the host of heaven came,
And lo! creation widened in man's view.

Who could have thought such darkness lay concealed

Within thy beams, O Sun! or who could find,

Whilst fly, and leaf, and insect, stood revealed,

That to such countless orbs thou mad'st us blind ?

Why do we then shun death with anxious strife ?

If light can thus deceive, wherefore not life ?

JOSEPH BLANCO WHITE.

When I see that there is great frugality as well as wisdom in the works of God, since He has been evidently sparing both of labor and materials, . . . I say, that when I see nothing annihilated, and not a drop of water wasted, I cannot suspect the annihilation of souls, or believe that He will suffer the daily waste of millions of minds ready made that now exist, and put himself to the continual trouble of making new ones. Thus, finding myself to exist in the world, I believe I shall, in some shape or other, always exist ; and with all the inconveniences human life is liable to, I shall not object to a new edition of mine, hoping, however, that the errata of the last may be corrected.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

As I approve of a youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man that has something of the youth.

CICERO.

O joy ! that in our embers
Is something that doth live,
That nature yet remembers
What was so fugitive !

The thought of our past years in me doth breed

Perpetual benediction — not, indeed,
For that which is most worthy to be blest ;
Delight and liberty, the simple creed
Of childhood, whether busy or at rest, With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast :

Not for these I raise

The song of thanks and praise ;

But for those obstinate questionings

Of sense and outward things,

Fallings from us, vanishings ;

Blank misgivings of a creature

Moving about in worlds not realized,

High instincts before which our mortal nature

Did tremble like a guilty thing surprised ;

But for those first affections,

Those shadowy recollections,

Which, be they what they may,

Are yet the fountain light of all our day,

Are yet a master light of all our seeing ;

Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make

Our noisy years seem moments in the being
Of the eternal silence : truths that wake,
To perish never ;
Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavor,
Nor man nor boy,
Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
Can utterly abolish or destroy !
Hence, in a season of calm weather,
Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither,
Can in a moment travel thither,
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling ever-
more !

Then sing, ye birds ! sing, sing a joyous song !
And let the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound !
We in thought will join your throng,
Ye that pipe and ye that play,
Ye that through your hearts to-day
Feel the gladness of the May !
What though the radiance which was once so bright

Be now forever taken from my sight,
Though nothing can bring back the hour Of splendor in the grass, of glory in the flower ;

We will grieve not, rather find Strength in what remains behind ;
In the primal sympathy
Which, having been, must ever be,
In the soothing thoughts that spring
Out of human suffering,
In the faith that looks through death,
In years that bring the philosophic mind.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH.

I follow the Italian custom of sleeping after dinner, and am much the better for it. This place [Venice] agrees particularly well with all of us, and is well suited for old people, who require air without fatigue.

MARY SOMERVILLE.

If, in the short term of life which is now allotted to mankind, men are capable of being puffed up to such an insolent degree of pride and folly as to forget their God and their own mortality, His power and their own weakness : if a prosperity, bounded by threescore and ten years (and what mortal's prosperity, since the deluge, ever lasted so long ?) can swell the mind of so frail a creature, to such a prodigious size of vanity, what boundaries could be set to his arrogance, if his life and prosperity, like that of the patriarchs, were likely to continue eight or nine hundred years together ?

CHARLES HOW.

I always eat at fixed hours, taking my time, masticating my food well, and leaving the table at every meal with some appetite. . . . Not too much salt or spice, little or no coffee. In short I avoid stimulants as I would the plague (for I feel no need of them), as well as alkalies, under whatever form they may be presented to me. But above all, above all, no discussions at table ! It has been truly said that one might as well swallow a pin-cushion full of pins, as to have discussions going on while one is eating.

M. MICHEL EUGÈNE CHEVREUL (æt. 100).¹

Oh ! what concerns it him whose way
Lies upward to the immortal dead,
That a few hairs are turning gray,
Or one more year of life is fled !

¹ From Le Journal Illustré, Sept. 5, 1886.

Swift years ! but teach me how to bear,
To feel and act with strength and skill,
To reason wisely, nobly dare,
And speed your courses as you will.

When life's meridian toils are done,
How calm, how rich, the twilight glow,
The morning twilight of a sun
Which shines not here on things below !

Press onward through each varying hour,
Let no weak fears thy course delay ;
Immortal being ! feel thy power,
Pursue thy bright and endless way.

ANDREWS NORTON.

Death, under the Christian aspect, is but God's method of colonization ; the transition from this mother-country of our race to the fairer and newer world of our emigration. What though no other passage thither is permitted to all the living, and by neither eye nor ear we can discover any trace of that unknown receptacle of vivid and more glorious life ? So might the dwellers in any other sphere make complaint respecting our poor world. Intensely as it burns with life, dizzy as our thought becomes with the din of its eager passions, and the cries of its many woes, yet from the nearest station that God's universe affords, — nay, at a few miles beyond its own confines, — all its stormy force, its crowded cities, the breathless hurry and ferment of nations, — the whole apparition and chorus of humanity, is still and motionless as death ; gathered all and lost within the circumference of a dark or illumined disk. And silent as those midnight heavens appear, well may there be, among their points of light, some one that thrills with the glow of our lost and immortal generations ; busy with the fleet movements, and happy energies, of existence more vivid than our own ; where, as we approach, we might catch the awful voices of the mighty dead, and the sweeter tones, lately heard in the last pain and sorrow, of our own departed ones.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

Do not . . . talk of the life to come as if sight were to be turned into faith, not faith into sight ; as if we were not to see eye to eye ; as if there could be no more beholding of the Lord, and no more leaning upon His breast, like that which is recorded of the beloved disciple. Believe in persons, in forms, in beating hearts, in the kindling eye, in the voice of pure affection ; and that to be translated and transfigured is only to be clothed upon with a more serviceable and expressive form.

RUFUS ELLIS.

No man can be perfectly happy until after his sixtieth year.

BONSTETTEN.

We must make a stand against old age, and its faults must be atoned for by activity ; we must fight, as it were, against disease, and in like manner against old age. Regard must be paid to health ; moderate exercises must be adopted ; so much of meat and drink must be taken, that the strength may be recruited, not oppressed. Nor, indeed, must the body alone be supported, but the mind and the soul much more ; for these also, unless you drop oil on them as on a lamp, are extinguished by old age. And our bodies, indeed, by weariness and exercise, become oppressed, but our minds are rendered buoyant by exercise.

CICERO.

Let's take the instant by the forward top ;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time
Steals, ere we can effect them.

SHAKESPEARE.

There is a period when the apple-tree blossoms with its fellows of the wood and field. How fair a time it is ! All nature is woosome and winning ; the material world celebrates its vegetable loves ; and the flower-bells, touched by the winds of spring, usher in the universal marriage of nature. Beast, bird, insect, reptile, fish, plant, lichen, with their prophetic colors spread, all float forward on the tide of new life. Then comes the summer. Many a blossom falls fruitless to the ground, littering the earth with beauty, never to be used. Thick leaves hide the process of creation, which first blushed public in the flowers, and now unseen goes on. For so life's most deep and fruitful hours are hid in mystery. Apples are growing on every tree ; all summer long they grow, and in early autumn. At length the fruit is fully formed ; the leaves begin to fall, letting the sun approach more near. The apple hangs there yet ; not to grow, only to ripen. Weeks long it clings to the tree ; it gains nothing in size and weight. Externally, there is increase of beauty. Having finished the form from within, nature brings out the added grace of color. It is not a tricky fashion painted on ; but an expression which of itself comes out, — a fragrance and a loveliness of the apple's innermost. Within, at the same time, the component elements are changing. The apple grows mild and pleasant. It softens, sweetens ; in one word it mellows. Some night, the vital forces of the tree get drowsy, and the autumn, with gentle breath, just shakes the bough ; the expectant fruit lets go its hold, full-grown, full ripe, full colored too, and with plump and happy sound the apple falls into autumn's lap ; and the spring's marriage promise is complete.

Such is the natural process which each fruit goes through, blooming, growing, ripening.

The same divine law is appropriate for every kind of animal, from the lowest reptile up to imperial man. It is very beautiful. The parts of the process are perfect ; the whole is complete. Birth is human blossom ; youth, manhood, they are our summer growth ; old age is ripeness.

The hands let go the mortal bough ; that is natural death. It is a dear, good God who orders all for the apple-tree, and for mankind.

THEODORE PARKER.

Thus the ninety-second year of my father's life wore away in the performance of duties, in the enjoyments of society, and in the recreations of literature. There was no symptom of even diminished activity and sprightliness of mind. He was as alive to the events of the day and to the pleasures of conversation as ever he had been. By his wise philosophy of life he had made maturity reach far into the years usually the domain of old age.

LIFE OF JOSIAH QUINCY BY EDMUND QUINCY.

I am not old, and will not be ;
I daily grow, and joys are piled
About my life, as when a child
I bloomed into Eternity.

And still for me the sunny day,
Outleaping from mysterious night,
With dew of God's fresh-breathing bright, Glistens in all its primal ray. . . .

And at the multitudinous joy
Of being, without, within, I drink

As thirsty as when on the brink
I played and pried, a wondering boy.

And am I not an infant still?

Or should I pace a sixscore span,
What were it to th' eternal plan
Ordained me by Almighty will?

All earthly time is fagot smoke ;
The soul is an upspringing flame,
That, kindled, mounts to whence it came,
And frees itself from yearly yoke.

The quick perennial now is mine
As much as in my wakeful youth, —
Nay, more ; for gleams of gathered truth
Their safety on its tempests shine.

GEORGE H. CALVERT.

But why should we grow old? Why should so noble a creature as man, so highly endowed with a moral and intellectual nature, have no power over his own destiny? . . . Why cannot we bid our strength remain? It is because growing old is an absolute and indispensable accessory of an immortal being. He was wise whose experience taught him to say, "I would not live away." He had realized the necessity of a termination to this tentative existence, and foresaw how barren, in the great results of wisdom and goodness, would be a life here interminably prolonged. Creatures of habit, we should go on in the same routine, with no anticipations of the future, strangers to any change in heart or life, and rendering progress an impossibility. If we can conceive of such an order of things, we must see that its realization would take from us all desire for immortality, and gradually deprive us of the happiness which is afforded in looking forward to a state of being where the injustice and inequalities incident to the present life should be counterbalanced and corrected.

TINSLEY'S MAGAZINE (1872).

Say, when does life come to be something worth?

When we know how to live and have lived through

Much in the wondrous mansion of the earth ;

When we live thirty, forty, years each day,
And every thought comes laden with the sweets

Of earth, as heavy-laden as the bee

With honey gathered on the flowery mead,
Home to the brain ; when every feeling stirs

A sea of feeling in us, made of all
That ever we enjoyed. For all that man E'er thought, hoped, wished, wept for—though in vain,

Stays by him faithfully for evermore !
When it comes back in thought, then is it true,

Fulfilled and made a portion of his life.

LEOPOLD SCHEFER.¹

“The necessity for compensation demands immortality.” “Demands” is a bold word, though warranted by the logical formula ; but God Himself, from the sense of justice which He has put into the heart, wills that the heart should utter it, — wills that His creatures should confidently express their sense of His justice.

There are, indeed, some of them, many of them, in whom, if He were to ask them whether they had not reason to be contented, even though annihilated, it might be becoming to answer, — “Yes, Lord. We have been healthy and possessed competence, and have led pleasant lives, and enjoyed Thy creation, and it is fit (with this sigh, which Thou wilt pardon) that we should be content to be nothing. But what of these other of Thy human creatures, who have been unhappy? What of any of Thy creatures whom Thou hast made to sigh for a state of things which they have not yet found, and to sigh with reason? They did not create themselves; they were not self-trained; their understandings are as limited as ours, perhaps more so; their pleasures are few; their sorrows many and great, often unaccountable; and for all these reasons Thou hast bid them make up, in brave and relying hearts, for what Thy good purposes require that they should want in certainty."

¹ The Layman's Breviary, translated from the German by C. T. Brooks.

Yes; that is the answer which an honest heart would give to Him that made it; to Him who qualified it to give the answer. Fear He has permitted, but accompanied with its contradiction. Something great and good to come for every immortal soul was the only reason why this or any other evil was, for a season, to be allowed existence.

LEIGH HUNT.

Then was he made aware, by soul or ear,
Of somewhat pure and holy bending o'er him,

And a voice like that of her who bore him, Tender and most compassionate: "Never fear!

For heaven is love, as God Himself is love;
Thy work below shall be thy work above."

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Nothing is more reasonable in itself than to submit patiently to those infirmities of nature which are brought on by the increase of years. You knew beforehand what you had to expect, when you numbered the successive summers and winters which were passing over your heads. Old age did not attack you by surprise, nor was it forced upon you against your choice. Often, and earnestly, did you wish to see long life, and many days. When arrived at the desired period, have you any just cause to complain, on account of enduring what the constitution of our being imposes on all? Did you expect that, for your sake, Providence was to alter its established order? Throughout the whole vegetable, sensible, and rational world, whatever makes progress towards maturity, as soon as it has passed that point, begins to verge towards decay. It is as natural for old age to be frail, as for the stalk to bend under the ripened ear, or for the autumnal leaf to change its hue. To this law, all who went before you have submitted; and all who come after you must yield.

HUGH BLAIR.

My soul such pleasure oft in sleep receives,
That death begins to seem a pleasant thing,
Nor to be armed, perchance, with such a sting,
Or taste so bitter, as the world conceives.
For if the mind alone sees, hears, believes,
While every limb is dead and languishing,
And greatest pleasure to herself can bring
When least the body feels, and least perceives,
Well may the hope be cherished, that, when quite Loosed from the burden of her earthly chain,
She hears, and sees, and knows her true delight.
Rejoice, thou troubled spirit! though in pain.

If thou canst take, even here, so sweet a flight,

What wilt thou in thy native seats again?

SANNAZZARO.

As the stream flows pleasantest when it approaches the ocean ; as the flowers send up their sweetest odors at the close of the day ; as the sun appears with greatest beauty in his going down ; so at the end of his career, the virtues and graces of a good man's life come before him with the most blessed remembrance, and impart a joy which he never felt before.

JOHN LOGAN.

Like some lorn abbey now, the wood

Stands roofless in the bitter air ;

In ruins on its floor is strewed

The carven foliage quaint and rare,

And homeless winds complain along

The columned choir once thrilled with song.

And thou, dear nest, whence joy and praise

The thankful oriole used to pour,

Swing'st empty while the north winds chase

Their snowy swarms from Labrador.

But, loyal to the happy past,

I love thee still for what thou wast.

Ah, when the summer graces flee
From other nests more dear than thou,
And, where June crowded once, I see
Only bare trunk and disleaved bough ;
When springs of life that gleamed and gushed
Run chilled, and slower, and are hushed ;

When our own branches, naked long,
The vacant nests of spring betray,
Nurseries of passion, love, and song
That vanished as our years grew gray ;
When Life drones o'er a tale twice-told O'er embers pleading with the cold, —

I'll trust that like the birds of spring,
Our good goes not without repair,
But only flies to soar and sing
Far off in some diviner air,
Where we shall find it in the calms
Of that fair garden 'neath the palms.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

If thou prepare thine heart and stretch out thy hands towards him, . . . then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot ;
yea, thou shalt be steadfast and not fear :
because thou shalt forget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away :

and thy age shall be clearer than the noon-day ; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning. And thou shalt be secure because there is hope.

JOB.

To die can never, without an enthusiasm which does violence to reason, and little credit to the heart, be an act of transport : so low as an act of submission it need not sink ; for that would imply a belief that the change from the present to the future is for evil. It is most fitly met in the spirit of trust ;—an unbroken belief that it is for the better, but a feeling of reluctance, which we distrust and check, as though it were for the worse ; a consciousness that, if we chose for ourselves, we should remain where we are, yet not a doubt of the greater wisdom and goodness of God's choice, that we should go. If this spirit of humble faith be not highwrought enough, may God forgive the loving hearts that can attain no better !

JAMES MARTINEAU.

Old age is better than youth for system and supervision, though not for swift execution of details.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

A man fears for his soul in a new world, while he cannot find a bird, or animal, or insect, not one, which its life does not exactly suit. Out of the body his soul will go into the man knows not what state, and so his mind misgives him ; while there is not a swallow comes out of its egg-shell into this great world unsuited to its manner of life ; and because the swallow wants it, there is an instinct of flight in it at a month old, which is wiser than geography and astronomy and meteorology.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

Clinging human loves, stifled longings, cries for rest, forgotten hopes, shall have their answer. Whatever the bewilderment of beauties folded away for us in heavenly nature and art, they shall strive with each other to make us glad. These things have their pleasant place. But, through eternity, there will always be something beyond and dearer than the dearest of them. God Himself will be first, — naturally and of necessity, without strain or struggle, first.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

It is a bore, I admit, to be past seventy, for you are left for execution, and are daily expecting the death-warrant, but as you say, it is not anything very capital we quit. We are, at the close of life, only hurried away from stomach-aches, pains in the joints, from sleepless nights and unamusing days, from weakness, ugliness, and nervous tremors; but we shall all meet again in another planet, cured of all our defects, — will be less irritable; — more silent; — will assent; Jeffrey will speak slower; Bobus will be just as he is; I shall be more respectful to the upper clergy; but I shall have as lively a sense as I now have of all your kindness and affection for me.

SYDNEY SMITH.

Oh this dreadful ignorance! Fain would I go to another world if it would clear up the problems of this!

ORVILLE DEWEY.

Once in the days of old, the traveller had
A weary time, climbing the rocky back
Of the old mountains; stumbled oftentimes
And froze in snow and storm, and yearned for home!

Now, — pleasantly at ease, he floats o'er all,
As o'er green cornfields floats the summer air!

I sail above them! — and they rest below,

Like the sea's bottom, like the smiling coasts !

Sooner or later, good Humanity, Nature sinks whatsoe'er once cumbered
thee,

And thou, thou glidest peacefully o'er all,
As floats o'er grain-fields green the summer air.

LEOPOLD SCHEFER.¹

Gray hair is beautiful in itself, and so softening to the complexion and so picturesque in its effect, that many a woman who has been plain in her youth, is, by its beneficent influence, transformed into a handsome woman.

MISS OAKLEY.

The most probable theory is that it is not the mind, properly so called, which alters in age, but the will which becomes weaker, and allows the mind to remain closed to all it has not become habituated to receive. . . . The irritability which sometimes marks old age proceeds, we take it, from just the same cause, — a failure in the will, which, in its strength, restrains the impulse towards querulousness, which, in its weakness, becomes so manifest to the observer.

¹ The Layman's Breviary, translated from the German by C. T. Brooks.

THE SPECTATOR (1872).

The love that cheers our latest stage,
Proof against sickness and old age,
Preserved by virtue from declension,
Becomes not weary of attention ;
But lives, when that exterior grace,
Which first inspired the flame decays.
'T is gentle, delicate, and kind,
To faults compassionate or blind,
And will with sympathy endure
Those evils it would gladly cure.

WILLIAM COWPER.

How happy would we be if we could always maintain the confidence of faith ! The soul in that case would be like that babe in the shipwrecked woman's arms on the plank, smiling amidst the waves, unconcerned with the hazard.

THOMAS BOSTON.

With me old age is matter-of-fact rather than sensation : it is true that bodily strength has declined, and is declining ; but not the power of entering into the life of the living, and enjoying the abundant blessings poured out upon me.

BARONESS BUNSEN (æt. 80).

Love and death make us all children.
Can old age be an evil thing which does the same?

GEORGE MACDONALD.

Length of days has not yet resulted in weariness of spirit.

PETER COOPER (æt. 90).

For what is our proof of immortality?
Not the analogies of nature; the resurrection of nature from a winter grave, or the emancipation of the butterfly. Not even the testimony to the fact of the risen dead; for who does not know how shadowy and unsubstantial these intellectual proofs become in unspiritual frames of mind? No, the life of the spirit is the evidence.
Heaven begun is the living proof that makes the heaven to come credible.

FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON.

The complete intellectual strength and health retained to the last by Lady Smith, who died at Lowestoft this day fortnight, within three months of the great age of one hundred and four, opens out almost a new prospect for the aged. . . . She seems to have been a wise and thoughtful, but by no means exceptional, woman in anything but the unimpaired vigor of her faculties

at an age when the nerves and the brain have usually gone before the body. But then that is precisely the interest of her case. Had she been a very remarkable woman in early years, everybody would have said that hers was a selected life, — a physique of exceptional force, — and that the unimpaired vigor of her faculties in age was due to the same exceptional causes which gave her her great brilliancy in youth. But as it is, excepting that the intellectual men of her youthful days found her a very fascinating woman, — a not uncommon experience with regard to women, who, like Lady Smith are at once beautiful and amiable, — there was no unusual power in her. And hence, of course, the vast age to which she retained her powers unimpaired, — unless the defect of vision which came upon her after her hundredth year be so accounted, — promises the more for the chance of other average men and women retaining their mental vivacity and interests to something like the same age.

THE SPECTATOR (1877).

We do not understand the meaning of our youth, our joys, our sorrows, till we look at them from a distance. We lose them to get them back again in a deeper way. The past is our true inheritance, which nothing can take from us. Its sacred lessons, its pure affections are ours forever. Nothing but the annihilation of our being could rob us of them.

FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON.

When Mr. Adams was in the very last stages of life, my father asked him one day how he had managed himself so as to keep his faculties entire up to ninety years. To which he replied, "By constantly employing them. The mind of an old man is like an old horse, — if you would get any work out of it, you must work it all the time."

EDMUND QUINCY'S LIFE OF JOSIAH QUINCY.

My dear friend, though you are several years my junior, yet we must both be sensible that our existence here cannot be long continued; but I think the best preparation for another life is to perform all our duties well in this, and the performance of those duties will afford that physical and intellectual action and exercise so necessary to continue the "mens sana in corpore sano." This action and exercise, however, ought not to be violent or agitating, nor carried to excess. You and I have arrived at that time of life when we may well say, “Horas non numero nisi serenas.”

OLD LETTER.

The day is to come, no doubt, when the heavens shall vanish as a scroll, and the elements be melted with fervent heat. So small is the value which Nature sets upon the perishable forms of matter! The question, then, is reduced to this: are Man's highest spiritual qualities, into the production of which all this creative energy has gone, to disappear with the rest? Has all this work been done for nothing? Is it all ephemeral, all a bubble that bursts, a vision that fades? Are we to regard the Creator's work as like that of a child, who builds houses out of blocks, just for the pleasure of knocking them down? For aught that science can tell us, it may be so, but I can see no good reason for believing any such thing. On such a view the riddle of the universe becomes a riddle without meaning. . . . For my own part, therefore, I believe in the immortality of the soul, not in the sense in which I accept the demonstrable truths of science, but as a supreme act of faith in the reasonableness of God's work.

JOHN FISKE.

There are some who say that to live a high life here in the hope of immortality hereafter is an unworthy object ; that it is more noble to do good, and to act well, and be content to perish. Strange perversion ! Is the desire of food for the sake of food, selfish ? Is the desire of knowledge for the sake of knowledge, selfish ? No ! they are appetites each with its appointed end : one a necessary appetite of the body, the other a noble appetite of the mind. Then, is the desire of immortal life for the sake of “more life and fuller,” selfish ? No ! rather it is the noblest, purest, truest appetite of the soul. It is not happiness nor reward we seek ; but we seek for the perfection of the imperfect — for the deep, abounding life of those who shall see God as He is, and shall feel the strong pulsations of that existence which is Love, Purity, Truth, Goodness : to whom shall be revealed all the invisible things of the Spirit in perfection !

FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON.

A few nights ago, after the sun had set, the broad sheet of ice on the meadows was all roseate and glowing with reflected light. I strive to realize this in the state of my own soul. My sun is setting, and the ice of age is gathering around me, but light from above and warm flushes of memory fall on the wintry landscape and make it beautiful.

LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

There is always some work for every season, not to be done before or after. That is why we need never be afraid of growing old.

MRS. ELIZABETH CHARLES.

"If it were not so," — do you take in the thoughtful tenderness of that? A mother, stilling her frightened child in the dark, might speak just so, — "if it were not so, I would have told you." That brooding love makes room for all that we can want.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

Pleasures away ; they please no more.
Friends ! are they what they were before ?
Loves ! they are very idle things,
The best about them are their wings.
The dance ! 't is what the bear can do ;
Music ! I hate your music too.

Whene'er these witnesses that Time
Hath snatched the chaplet from our prime,
Are called by Nature, as we go
With eye more wary, step more slow,

And will be heard and noted down,
However we may fret or frown,
Shall we desire to leave the scene
Where all our former joys have been ?
No, 't were ungrateful and unwise.
But when die down our charities
For human weal and human woes,
Then is the time our eyes should close.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

You do not know yet what it is to be seventy years old. I will tell you, so that you may not be taken by surprise when your turn comes. It is like climbing the Alps. You reach a snow-crowned summit, and see behind you the deep valley stretching miles and miles away, and before you other summits higher and whiter, which you may have strength to climb, or may not. Then you sit down and meditate and wonder which it will be. That is the whole story, amplify it as you may. All that one can say is, that life is opportunity.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

I saw some extracts from Father Taylor's Biography¹ in the papers. I was much amused with his answer to his nurse, when she sought to comfort him by saying, "You will soon be with the angels." "What do I care about angels!" he exclaimed, "I want to be with folks." That was a real outburst of nature.

¹ Life of Father Taylor, by Judge Russell and Mr. Haven, where the anecdote is told with this addition: "then with rarest insight he adds, 'but angels are folks.'"

LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

A wayside pilgrim, having reached today
The milestone of his threescore years and ten, Thought thus within himself: "This marks,
they say,
The bound of life, the common age of men.
My seventy years have passed, and I must be An old, old man, if fact with fact agree."

Thus musing, he beheld a portal rise
Before him, blazoned with the words, "OLD AGE : "
"Ah, here's the proof in black and white,"
he cries;
"And, since I've reached this venerable stage
Of human eld and weakness, here I'll sit
And storm the gate till some one open it."

Obedient to his summons out there peered A blear-eyed Presence, sour and sad and grim, —

Gazed on him a moment with a weird
And vacant look ; then, scowling, spoke to him.

“How knowest thou this refuge be for thee ?

Stand back and give the countersign,” said he.

A happy guess within the pilgrim wrought :
“The countersign ! I know it well !” he cried, —

“Contentment, Gladness, Peace !” “Thou know’st it not,”

The Presence answered : “entrance is denied.

Thy watchword, Sire, were fitter, in good sooth,

To ope the portal of Eternal Youth.”

A sudden glory on the landscape lay ;
His seventy years rose luminous and crowned ;

While, peaceful, glad, content, upon his way

The pilgrim went, unwitting he had found

The secret of the Lord, and passed, in truth,

The shining threshold of Eternal Youth.

CAROLINE A. MASON.

A man does in truth remember that which it interests him to remember, and when we hear that memory has gone as age has come on, we should understand that capacity for interest in the matter concerned has perished. A man will generally be very old and feeble before he forgets how much money he has in the funds.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

If you wish for anything like happiness in the fifth act of life, eat and drink about one half of what you could eat and drink. Did I ever tell you my calculation about eating and drinking? Having ascertained the weight of what I could live upon, so as to preserve health and strength, and what I did live upon, I found that between ten and seventy years of age, I had eaten and drunk forty-four horse wagon-loads of meat and drink more than would have preserved me in life and health! The value of this mass of nourishment I considered to be worth seven thousand pounds sterling. It occurred to me that I must, by my voracity, have starved to death fully a hundred persons. This is a frightful calculation, but irresistibly true.

SYDNEY SMITH.

Our life is nothing but a winter's day ;
Some only break their fast and so away ;
Others stay dinner, and depart full fed ;
The deepest age but sups and goes to bed ;
Who dies betimes has less and less to pay.

QUARLES.

And here I cannot but mention an observation which I have often made, upon reading the lives of the philosophers, and comparing them with any series of kings or great men of the same number. If we consider these ancient sages, a great part of whose philosophy consisted in a temperate and abstemious course of life, one would think the life of a philosopher and the life of a man were of two different dates. For we find that the generality of these wise men were nearer a hundred than sixty years of age, at the time of their respective deaths.

JOSEPH ADDISON.

My God, my everlasting hope !
I live upon thy truth ;

Thy hands have held my childhood up,
And strengthened all my youth.

Still has my life new wonders seen,
Repeated every year ;
Behold the days that yet remain,
I trust them to Thy care.

Cast me not off when strength declines,
When hoary hairs arise ;
And round me let Thy glories shine,
Whene'er Thy servant dies.

Then in the history of my age,
When men review my days,
They'll read Thy love in every page,
In every line Thy praise.

ISAAC WATTS.

Is your eyesight dimmer ? Then the world is seen by you in a cathedral light. Is your hearing duller ? Then it is just as though you were always where loud voices and footsteps ought not to be heard. Is your temper not as merry as it was once ? Then it is more solemn ; so that round you the common atmosphere feels like that of the house of the Lord. Yes, for twilight and silence and solemnity, old age makes us like daily dwellers in the house of the Lord.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

The ills of age, its pain, its care,
The drooping spirit for its fate prepare ;
And each affection failing, leaves the heart Loosed from life's charm, and willing to depart.

GEORGE CRABBE.

Age is not necessarily attended either with infirmity of body or asperity of mind ; and when they do occur, it is the effect of unregulated appetites and passions, of a morbid constitution, or of natural sourness of temper. Indeed I have been much gratified to perceive that the effects of age may be directly the reverse ; and that the feelings and affections of the mind may become softer and milder, more kind and more benevolent, as the Child of Immortality approaches the commencement of his spiritual existence.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

The comforts of home become every day more important to old people ; a bad bed, a cold room, a smoky grate — these are the prices always paid for excursions.

SYDNEY SMITH.

Nothing ages like laziness.

BULWER-LYTTON.

It is our duty to employ our talents for the good of others ; and how can we better show our gratitude for the comforts and advantages which it has pleased God to bestow on us ? But it is also a duty to ascertain what our strength will bear. Excess of labor will exhaust the greatest intellectual powers, and the best natural constitution.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

Now this is why, in my old age,
No sorrow clouds my brow,
No grief comes near me, and no cares
Disturb me here below.
Serenity broods o'er my mind
For I daily pray to Heaven,
That when the hour of death arrives
My sins may be forgiven.
No anxious fears disturb my breast,
My days serenely roll ;
I tarry till it pleaseth God
To heaven to take my soul.

JEAN MICHEL.

How can you ever be sad, looking forward to eternal life with all whom you love, and God over all ? It is only so far as I lose hold of that hope, that anything is ever a trial to me.

JOHN RUSKIN.

He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age!

SHAKESPEARE.

Death is neither an end nor a beginning. It is a transition, not from one existence to another, but from one state of existence to another. No link is broken in the chain of being, any more than in passing from infancy to manhood, from manhood to old age. . . . Death brings us again to our friends. They are waiting for us and we shall not long delay. They have gone before us and are like the angels in heaven. They stand upon the borders of the grave to welcome us, with the countenance of affection they wore on earth, — yet more lovely, more radiant, more spiritual.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

My own dim life should teach me this,
That life shall live for evermore,
Else earth is darkness at the core,
And dust and ashes all that is.

ALFRED TENNYSON.

In the sunset of life, the path behind looks the more golden the farther off it is ; but it only looks so, for it is not so really.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

It is clear that neither the phenomena of death, nor any other sensible impression, can afford the least substantive evidence that the mind has ceased to be. Non-existence is a negation, which neither sight can see, nor ear can hear : and the fading eye, the motionless lips, the chill hand, establish nothing, and simply give us no report : refusing us the familiar expression of the soul within, they leave the great question open, to be determined by any positive probabilities which may be sought in other directions. In life we never saw or heard the principle of thought and will and love, but only its corporeal effects in lineament and speech. If the bare absence of these signs were sufficient to prove the extinction of the spirit which they obey, the spectacle of sleep would justify us in pronouncing the mind dead : and if neither slumber nor silence have been found to afford reason for the denial of simultaneous thought, death affords no better ground for the dreary inference.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

I trust that as we advance in age, and strive as in reason we ought to do to make our attachments less and less strong to the things which are merely of this earth and for this life, we may yet blamelessly, even commendably, cling with warmer and closer love to the persons, the friends, whom loving through life we humbly hope to love through all eternity.

J. T. COLERIDGE.¹

The unattained
In life, at last
When life is passed,
Shall all be gained ;
And no more pained,
No more distressed,
Shalt thou find rest.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.²

Whether old or young God never calls away his servants till there is a vacant place elsewhere for them to fill.

EDMUND H. SEARS.

If we may trust the Good God here with all that appertains to us and ours, why not hereafter? To me the future is ever luminous ; and though I indulge in no reveries,

¹ A memoir of the Rev. John Keble.

² Translated from the Spanish Cancioneros.

I feel a strength and an exaltation of spirit, in view of it, which words are too feeble to express.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.¹

Higher than the question of our duration is the question of our deserving. Immortality will come to such as are fit for it, and he who would be a great soul in future, must be a great soul now. It is a doctrine too great to rest on any legend, that is, on any man's experience but our own. It must be proved, if at all, from our own activity and designs, which imply an interminable future for their play.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

His brief day's journey done,
Behind the distant hill's empurpled crest,
With blood-red track traced on the water's breast,
Slow sinks the sun.

The frosty diadem Crowns every tree and whitens all the lawn,
Scattering, till melted by to-morrow's dawn,
Each glittering gem.

¹ In a letter to a friend, June 15, 1860.

Upon each leafless branch
Hang tiny icicles. That bank of cloud, Which to a crescent dwarfs yon orb so proud,
This night may blanch

The ground with pure white snow :
So on my head, these silver streaks of age
The solemn sinking of life's sun presage
Ere long, I know ;

But know, the golden morn,
Behind the purple hills of shadow-land,
Waits but the waking of a magic hand
To be reborn.

TINSLEY'S MAGAZINE, April, 1874.

What does life offer at past eighty (at which venerable age I arrived one day last June); and I believe you will allow that there is not much of new, of animating, of inviting, to be met with after that age. For my own part, I only find that many things I knew, I have forgotten ; many things I thought I knew, I find I know nothing about ; some things I know, I have not found worth knowing ; and some things I would give — Oh what would one not give to know ? are beyond the reach of human ken.

ANNA LÆTITIA BARBAULD.

Does any one say even my memory is but "a bag with holes"? (Haggai i. 6.) I cannot recollect all that I read;—things that I thought were stored in my mind, I can no longer find? I listen to a sermon, and I cannot carry away anything that is permanent; something good is said in conversation, but I strive in vain to recall it?

What of all this, if the heart's desires be pure and sweet? What though the mind be no longer an encyclopædia, if the hand and heart be true, if the character be transparent and child-like?

WILLIAM ORNE WHITE.

Remember that while one of the pleasures of old age is to be of use to others, that of hearing one's self chatter is another: I shall therefore strive to set a watch upon my tongue. Homer, you recollect, compares the prattle of Priam's aged counsellors to the unceasing chirping of grasshoppers.

SIR THOMAS BERNARD.

As we grow older we think more and more of old persons and things. As to old persons, it seems as if we never knew how much they had to tell, until we are old ourselves and they have been gone twenty or thirty years. Once in a while we come upon some survivor of his or her generation that we have overlooked, and feel as if we had recovered one of the lost books of Livy, or fished up the golden candlestick from the ooze of the Tiber.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Consider ! thou canst not do otherwise Than as earth's order wills, and all thy wails

Only torment thyself. So live thou, then, Resigned and glad through all thy well-spent days,

That fate may be to thee no punishment,
But come to thee a calmly - looked - for
thing,

As gently as the evening heaven comes down,

Softly as children who go home ere night,
For nothing ill can e'er befall the good !

LEOPOLD SCHEFER.¹

How strange it would be, when we come to die, to find that death, which we have thought so much of, is nothing to think of ! Death at last and for the first time takes everlasting leave of us. Death will just so surely depart from us as we come to die.

¹ The Layman's Breviary, translated from the German by C. T. Brooks.

ORVILLE DEWEY.

Some person has sent me a sermon on old age, by Theodore Parker. . . . Some things are represented according to nature, some are imaginary, others mistaken. So far as my experience goes at the age of eighty-two, I cannot agree that it is the characteristic of old age to lose the love of new things and new persons, and think the old to be better. On the contrary, almost everything at the present time seems to me to be better ; and I do not limit this feeling and opinion to physical improvements and accommodations, but extend it to morals and religion. It is true, that with increasing population crime has increased, but with it a counteracting spirit is in action, aiming to repress these consequences, accompanying which is an enlarged sense of public duty, willing to make sacrifices of time, labor, and money for the general improvement and comfort of our race.

JOSIAH QUINCY.

It is a mistake of ultra-spiritualism, to connect degradation with the thought of a risen body ; or to suppose that a mind, unbound by the limitations of space, is a more spiritual idea of a resurrection than the other. The opposite to spirituality is not materialism, but sin. The form of matter does not degrade. For what is this world itself but the Form of Deity, whereby the Manifoldness of His mind and Beauty manifests, and wherein it clothes itself ? It is idle to say that the spirit can exist apart from form. We do not know that it can. Perhaps the Eternal Himself is more closely bound to His works than our philosophical systems have conceived. Perhaps matter is only a mode of thought.

FREDERICK W. ROBERTSON.

The materialistic assumption . . . that the life of the soul ends with the life of the body, is perhaps the most colossal instance of baseless assumption that is known to the history of philosophy.

JOHN FISKE.

Oh the riches Love doth inherit !

Ah, the alchemy which doth change
Dross of body and dregs of spirit

Into sanctities rare and strange !

My flesh is feeble and dry and old,

My darling's beautiful hair is gray ;

But our elixir and precious gold Laugh at the footsteps of decay.

Harms of the world have come unto us,
Cups of sorrow we yet shall drain ;
But we have a secret which doth show us
Wonderful rainbows in the rain.
And we hear the tread of the years move by,
And the sun is getting behind the hills ;
But my darling does not fear to die,
And I am happy in what God wills.

So we sit by our household fires together,
Dreaming the dreams of long ago :
Then it was balmy summer weather,
And now the valleys are laid in snow.
Icicles hang from the slippery eaves ;
The wind blows cold, —'t is growing
late ;
Well, well ! we have garnered all our sheaves,
I and my darling, and we wait.

RICHARD REALF.

This, I take it, — I say it with reverence and under correction, — is the danger of old age : — that the man should be querulous ; should slight the needful and appropriate joys of youth and manhood ; that he should be timid of all things which are new, consult with his fear, and not his hope, and look backwards and not forth. These, it seems to me, are the special dangers of the old man. Pardon me, venerable persons, if I mistake! I read from only without; you can answer from within. It is said that men seldom get a new idea after five-and-forty. It is perhaps true; but it has also been my fortune to know men and women who in their old age had a long Indian summer, in which the grass grew fresh again, and the landscape had a richness, a mellowness of outline and of tint; yea! and of beauty, too, which it had lacked in earlier years.

THEODORE PARKER.

Miss Martineau's passing out of this world in utter indifference as to what would become of her, seems to me altogether unnatural, on her ground or any other. Any good or glad hold on existence implies the desire for its continuance. She had no hope, nor wish for it, as well as no belief in it.

As to belief in it, or hope of it, why should not the law of development lead to such a feeling? The plant, having within it the power to produce flower or fruit, does not naturally die till it comes to that maturity. The horse or ox attains to its full strength and speed before its life is ended. Why should it not be so with man? His powers are not half, rather say not one hundredth part, developed, when he arrives at that point which is called death. Development is impossible to him, unless he continues to exist, and to go onward.

ORVILLE DEWEY.

The light of the sun is withdrawing; but blessed be Heaven, the light of the evening star reveals the hope of a coming immortality.

JOSIAH QUINCY.

Friend, whom thy fourscore winters leave more dear
Than when life's roseate summer on thy cheek
Burned in the flush of manhood's manliest year,
Lonely, how lonely! is the snowy peak Thy feet have reached, and mine have climbed so near!
Close on thy footsteps 'mid the landscape
drear
I stretch my hand thine answering grasp to seek,

Warm with the love no rippling rhymes can speak !

Look backwards ! From thy lofty height survey

Thy years of toil, of peaceful victories won,
Of dreams made real, largest hopes outrun !

Look forward ! Brighter than earth's morning ray

Streams the pure light of Heaven's unset-ting sun,

The all-unclouded dawn of life's immortal
day !

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, to John Greenleaf Whittier.

To a good old man, his gray hair is a crown ; and it may be worn, and it ought to be, like what has been given as an earnest of the crown of immortality.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

As the disease of old age is epidemic, endemic, and sporadic, and everybody that lives long enough is sure to catch it, I am going to say, for the encouragement of such as need it, how I treat the malady in my own case.

First. As I feel that, when I have anything to do, there is less time for it than when I was younger, I find that I give my attention more thoroughly, and use my time more economically than ever before ; so that I can learn anything twice as easily as in my earlier days. I am not, therefore, afraid to attack a new study. I took up a difficult language a very few years ago with good success, and think of mathematics and metaphysics, by and by.

Secondly. I have opened my eyes to a good many neglected privileges and pleasures within my reach, and requiring only a little courage to enjoy them. You may well suppose it pleased me to find that old Cato was thinking of learning to play the fiddle, when I had deliberately taken it up in my old age, and satisfied myself that I could get much comfort, if not much music, out of it.

Thirdly. I have found that some of those active exercises, which are commonly thought to belong to young folks only, may be enjoyed at a much later period.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

For many years I have not been able to read or write for more than half an hour at a time ; often not so long. Of late, my hearing has been defective. But in many ways I have been blest far beyond my deserving ; and, grateful to the divine providence, I tranquilly await the close of a life which has been longer, and on the whole happier, than I had reason to expect, although far different from that which I dreamed of in youth. My experience confirms the words of old time, that "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Claiming no exemption from the sins and follies of our common humanity, I dare not complain of their inevitable penalties. I have had to learn renunciation and submission, and

"Knowing
That kindly Providence its care is showing
In the withdrawal, as in the bestowing, Scarcely I dare for more or less to pray."

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

I feel
Upon this giddy margin of two worlds,
That there is nothing beautiful in this
The passion'd soul has clasped, but shall partake
Its everlasting essence ; not a scent
Of rain-drenched flower, nor fleece of evening cloud, Which blended with a thought that rose to heaven,

Shall ever die ; but link'd with joy that drew Color and shape from this fair world, shall shed Familiar sweetness through the glorious frame
After a thousand ages.

THOMAS NOON TALFOURD.

The more we sink into the infirmities of age, the nearer we are to immortal youth. All people are young in the other world. That state is an eternal spring, ever fresh and flourishing. Now, to pass from midnight into noon on the sudden ; to be decrepit one minute and all spirit and activity the next, must be a desirable change.

JEREMY COLLIER.

Scarcely Hope hath shaped for me
What the future life may be.
Other lips may well be bold ;
Like the publican of old,
I can only urge the plea,
“Lord, be merciful to me !”
Nothing of desert I claim, Unto me belongeth shame.
Not for me the crowns of gold,
Psalms and harpings manifold ;
Not for erring eye and feet,
Jasper wall and golden street.

What thou wilt, O Father, give !
All is gain that I receive.
If my voice I may not raise
In the elder's song of praise,
If I may not, sin-defiled,
Claim my birth-right as a child,
Suffer it that I to Thee
As an hired servant be ;
Let the lowliest task be mine,
Grateful, so the task be Thine ;
Let me find the humblest place
In the shadow of Thy grace :
Blest to me were any spot
Where temptation whispers not.
If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on ;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do ;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant ;
Let me find in Thy employ Peace that dearer is than joy ;
Out of self to love be led,
And to Heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good Seem my natural habitude.

The second childhood of a saint is the early infancy of a happy immortality.

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

[The old man] freely blesses God, that when, from its altered ways, the world has become no longer congenial to him, he is permitted to leave it ; and he can rejoice that those who remain behind behold it with different eyes : for he recognizes and admires God's law, that those who are to live in the world shall not be out of love with it. From the mental station which he occupies it certainly seems as if twilight were gathering fast and leading on the night ; and so for two things he is thankful : that the vesper-bell flings its note upon his ear, and calls him to prayer and rest ; and that on others of his race, who gaze into the heavens from a different point, the morning seems to be rising, and its fresh breeze to be up, and the matin rings its summons : — for always there must be prayer ; only at dawn it leads to labor, and at eve to rest.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

Our pleasures in literature do not, I think, decline with age. Last first of January was my eighty-second birthday, and I think that I had as much enjoyment from books as ever I had in  my life.

MARIA EDGEWORTH.

Books are a guide in youth, and an entertainment for age. They support us under solitude, and keep us from being a burden to ourselves. They help us to forget the crossness of men and things ; compose our cares and passions ; and lay our disappointments asleep. When we are weary of the living, we may repair to the dead, who have nothing of peevishness, pride, or design in their conversation.

JEREMY COLLIER.

In many things a man knows the autumn of life is a falling off from its spring-time. He has ceased to dance ; his voice quavers abominably when he tries to sing ; he has no fancy now for climbing hills, and he shirks walks of forty miles a day. Perhaps deeper wrinkles have been traced by time on the heart than on the forehead, and the early freshness of feeling is gone. But surely, in mellowed experience, in sobered and sound views of things, in tempered expectations, in patience, in sympathy, in kindly charity, in insight into God's ways and dealings, he is better now a thousand times than he was then. He has worked his way through the hectic stage in which even able and thoughtful men fancy that Byron was a great poet. A sounder judgment and a severer taste direct him now ; in all things, in short, that make the essence of the manly nature, he is a better and further advanced man than he ever was before. The physical nature says, by many little signs "we are going down hill ;" the spiritual nature testifies by many noble gains and acquirements, "we are going onward and upward."

RECREATIONS OF A COUNTRY PARSON.

After this I beheld until they were come into the land of Beulah, where the sun shineth night and day. Here, because they were weary, they betook themselves a while to rest. And because this country was common for pilgrims, and because the orchards and vineyards that were here belonged to the King of the Celestial Country, therefore they were licensed to make bold with many of His things. But a little while soon refreshed them here ; for the bells did so ring, and the trumpets continually sounded so melodiously, that they could not sleep, and yet they received as much refreshing as if they slept their sleep never so soundly. . . . But how were their ears now filled with heavenly noises, and their eyes delighted with celestial visions ! In this land they heard nothing, saw nothing, felt nothing, smelt nothing, tasted nothing that was offensive to their stomach or mind ; only when they tasted of the water of the river over which they were to go, they thought that it tasted a little bitterish to the palate ; but it proved sweeter when it was down.

JOHN BUNYAN, Pilgrim's Progress.

Fain would I breathe that gracious word “ Now lettest thou thy servant, Lord, Depart in peace.”

When may I kindly claim that kind award,

And cares and labors cease ?

With anxious heart I watch at heaven's gate

Answer to hear ;

With failing strength I feel the increasing weight

Of every passing year ;

Hath not the time yet fully come, dear Lord,

Thy servant to release ?

Be still, my heart! In silence God doth speak;
Here is thy place, here, not at heaven's gate.
Thy task is not yet finished; frail and weak,
Doing or suffering, steadfast in thy faith
Thy service is accepted, small or great;
His time is thine — or soon or late.
If daylight fades, work while the twilight lasts,
Then "stand and wait."

WILLIAM G. ELIOT.

Eleazer, one of the principal scribes, an aged man, and of a well-favored countenance, was constrained [by the agent of Antiochus Epiphanes] to open his mouth, and to eat swine's flesh. But he choosing rather to die gloriously than to live stained with such an abomination, spit it forth, and came of his own accord to the torment, as it behoved them to come, that are resolute to stand out against such things as are not lawful for love of life to be tasted.

But they that had the charge of that wicked feast, for the old acquaintance they had with the man, taking him aside, besought him to bring flesh of his own provision, such as was lawful for him to use, and make as if he did eat of the flesh taken from the sacrifice commanded by the king ; that in so doing he might be delivered from death, and for the old friendship with them, find favor. But he began to consider discreetly, and as became his age, and the excellency of his ancient years, and the honor of his gray head, whereunto he was come, and his most honest education from a child, or, rather, the holy law made and given by God ; therefore he answered accordingly, and willed them straightways to send him to the grave.

For it becometh not our age, said he, in any wise to dissemble, whereby many young persons might think that Eleazer, being fourscore years old and ten, were now gone to a strange religion ; and so they, through mine hypocrisy, and desire to live a little time and moment longer, should be deceived by me, and I get a stain to my old age and make it abominable. For though for the present time I should be delivered from the punishment of men : yet should I not escape the hand of the Almighty, neither alive, nor dead. Wherefore now, manfully changing this life, I will show myself such an one as mine age requireth, and leave a notable example to such as be young to die willingly and courageously, for the honorable and holy laws. And when he had said these words immediately he went to the torment. . . .

But when he was ready to die with stripes, he groaned, and said, It is manifest unto the Lord, that hath the holy knowledge, that whereas I might have been delivered from death, I now endure sore pains in body by being beaten : but in soul am well content to suffer these things, because I fear Him.

And thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue, not only unto young men, but unto all his nation.

II. MACCABEES.

“Whom the gods love die young,” because they never grow old, though they may live to fourscore years and upwards.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Oh loose this frame, this knot of man untie !

That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinioned with mortalitie,

As an intangled hamper'd thing
O, show Thyself to me
Or take me up to Thee !

What have I left, that I should stay and grone ?

The most of me to heav'n is fled :
My thoughts and joyes are all packt up and gone,
And for their old acquaintance plead.
O show Thyself to me
Or take me up to Thee !

Come, dearest Lord, passe not this holy season,

My flesh and bones and joynts do pray :
And ev'n my verse, when by the ryme and reason

The word is Stay, says ever, Come.
O show Thyself to me
Or take me up to Thee !

GEORGE HERBERT.

(After Death.) Husband. Art thou sent down from heaven to earth, that I should see thee again for a short time and then anew through long years lament thy disappearance ?

Wife. No, henceforth we shall never separate. I am indeed sent to thee, but not down upon the earth. Look around thee here ; where upon earth hast thou seen such trees, such flowers, such waters ? Regard thyself ; thou didst go about thither bowed beneath the weight of years. Now thou art young again. Thou goest not, thou floatest ; thine eyes not only see, but see immeasurably far. Look inward upon thyself ; has it always been with thy heart as now ?

Husband. Within me is a deep, unfathomable, ever swelling, and yet entirely still and peaceful sea. Yes, when I look about me here, when I look within me, when I feel thy hand in mine — then I must say I am blessed, I am in heaven.

Wife. Thou art. . . .

Husband. I am dead ! Lord of life and death, upon my knees I thank Thee that Thou hast fulfilled this so great thing in me ; that Thou hast led me to such high happiness, such great honor ; dead, and happy to be dead. Thou knowest, O Lord, how often I have prayed that Thou, Thyself, since I was not able to do it, wouldst prepare me for that hour, — that Thou wouldst send me a soft, blessed death.

Now, O Lord, Thou hast heard this and all my other prayers. Thou hast in this, as in all things eternally, shown Thyself gracious and pitiful; — what stood before me is now over. Truly, though dead, I have not learned what death is; but this much I know, death is sweet. As one bears a sleeping child out of a dark chamber into a bright, spring garden, so hast Thou borne me from earth to heaven.

Translated from the German of THEREMIN.

I should be sorry to believe that when the body falls away from us we are less real and substantial beings, and not rather more so; sorry to think that this world of dull sense and matter, beautiful as it is, is the best world that God has made; sorry to think that these bodies of flesh and blood are the best bodies which God creates. Let us dismiss, then, this notion of ghostly existence after death, and think of it as the very fulness of warm and positive being, throbbing and blooming with a life which the pulses of these mortal bodies are too languid to measure. Hence, in all the Scripture scenes which give us gleams of the immortal life, they picture it to us not as more dim and shadowy, but as more bright and real, — as in the transfiguration scene where Moses and Elijah appeared in glory.

EDMUND H. SEARS.

My life I would not live over again; would you yours? Why, then, should you sorrow for what you would not wish to have?

WILLIAM MOUNTFORD.

There appears, after the decrepitude of age, an obvious need of some such mighty revolution as death; the mortality of such a body becomes a clear essential to the immortality of the soul; and our departure assumes the probable aspect of a simple migration of the mind, — a journey of refreshment, — a passage to new scenes of that infinite universe, to a mere speck of which, since we can discover its immensity, it seems unlikely that we should be confined.

JAMES MARTINEAU.

The sensation of excessive weakness, of inability for bodily exertion, is the only sign with me of the nearness of cessation in this long-preserved activity of the human frame, which seems nowhere out of order, or flagging in the vividness of life;

the same interests, the same craving after knowledge of the works of God, or the ways of His Providence, continue to animate my existence.

BARONESS BUNSEN (æt. 82).

The desires of an old man who has well ordered his life, seldom exceed the powers which age has left him for their gratification.

WILLIAM VON HUMBOLDT.

With singular goodness, God has rendered a disposition to sleeplessness nearly universal with the old. Life is worth more than sleep. God would fain multiply the attainments of the aged; and since time presses, He gives them an increasing share in that watchfulness which the Scripture places between prayer and alms.

MADAME SWETCHINE.

Old age is in reality like youth, but an entrance into life—an exaltation of the thoughts. Much as we love the scenes and the circumstances about us, we feel that at the appointed time we shall leave them without repining. Without considering them in a religious point of view, there is something indescribably affecting in the thought of passing into infinite space; in the contemplation of which one becomes purified from all the petty sorrows of the world.

WILLIAM VON HUMBOLDT.

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise.

SHAKESPEARE.

Are there not aspirations in each heart
After a brighter, better world than this?
Longings for beings nobler in each part — Things more exalted — steeped in deeper bliss?

Who gave us these? What are they?
Soul, in thee

The bud is budding now for immortality!

Death comes to take me where I long to be;
One pang, and bright blooms the immortal flower;

Death comes to lead me from mortality,
To lands which know not one unhappy
hour.

I have a hope, — a faith; from sorrow here
I am led by death away — why should I start and fear?

If I have loved the forest and the field,
Can I not love them deeper, better, there?

If all that Power hath made, to me doth yield

Something of good and beauty, something fair, —

Freed from the grossness of mortality,
May I not love them all and better all enjoy ?

A change from woe to joy — from earth to heaven,

Death gives me this : — it leads me calmly where

The souls, that long ago from mine were riven,

May meet again ! Death answers many a prayer.

Bright day, shine on, be glad ! Days brighter far

Are stretched before my eyes, than those of mortals are.

ROBERT NICOLL.

One thing I have thought much about ;
it is that, whatever may be our first experience after leaving the body, it is not likely to be a revolutionary one. It is more in analogy with God's dealings that a quiet process, a gentle accustoming, should open our eyes on the light that would blind if it came in a flash. Perhaps we shall not see Him,—perhaps we could not bear it to see Him at once. It may be that the faces of familiar human friends will be first to greet us; it may be that the touch of the human hand dearer than any but His own shall lead us, as we are able, behind the veil, till we are a little used to the glory and the wonder, and lead us so to Him.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

The seas are quiet when the winds give o'er ;

So, calm are we when passions are no
more ;

For then we know how vain it was to boast

Of fleeting things so certain to be lost.

Clouds of affection from our younger eyes Conceal that emptiness which age de-scries ;

The soul's dark cottage, batter'd and de-cayed,

Lets in new light through chinks that time has made.

Stronger by weakness, wiser men become,
As they draw near to their eternal home ;

Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,

That stand upon the threshold of the new.

WALLER.

We know that we are old before we feel it. The language of those around us betrays to us the secret. Life is a landscape without hedge or fence. We pass from one field to another and see no boundaries.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Many a poet has sung laments over departed youth ; did any ever sing, or chant — for it would be like a psalm — the peace, the joy, the comfort of growing old ; of knowing passions dead, temptations conquered, experience won, individual interests become universal, and vain fantastic hopes merged into simple strong-built faith, — faith which makes of death its foundation stone, and has for its summit Eternity ? The “Hymn to Old Age” would be one not unworthy of a great poet. Who will write it ?

MISS MULOCK.

My old aunt lives here alone, and being eighty-six the scene must soon close entirely ; yet she is still a wonderful woman, and the most glorious specimen of old age

one can imagine. Usually there are weaknesses and symptoms of deterioration mentally, from bodily wear and tear : but here the mind is as clear and powerful as in its best years. . . . There is a placidity and a child-like enjoyment of nature, that I never saw equalled. Her affections are strong, but all her pleasures seem to be derived from her flowers, trees, birds, and out-of-door pursuits.

CHARLOTTE WILLIAMS-WYNN.

I have always given a friendly welcome to new ideas, and have endeavored not to feel too old to learn ; and thus, though I stand here with the snows of so many winters on my head, my faith in human nature, my belief in the progress of man to a better social condition, and especially my trust in the ability of men to establish and maintain self-government, are as fresh and as young as when I began to travel the path of life. . . . Let me say in conclusion that my experience of life has not dimmed my hopes for humanity : that my sun is not setting in clouds and darkness ; but is going down cheerfully in a clear firmament lighted up by the glory of God, who should always be venerated and loved, as the infinite source and fountain of all Light, Life, Power, Wisdom and Goodness.

PETER COOPER (æt. 83).

“If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in with him and sup with him, and he with me.” Happy old age! It is for supper, and not for a mid-day feast, where noise and tumult reign; it is to sup with us that our Lord will come: at the close of the dull, weary, toilsome day; at the hour of long, sweet, friendly talks, when intimacy grows deepest, and confidence flows with a full stream; at night-fall, when hearts approach and mingle and think of naught save how to bless and sanctify the sleep which is to follow.

I collect myself, O my God! at the close of life, as at the close of day, and bring to Thee my thoughts and my love. The last thoughts of a heart that loves Thee are like those last, deepest, ruddiest rays of the setting sun. Thou hast willed, O my God! that life should be beautiful even to the end. Make me to grow and keep my green, and climb like the plant which lifts its head to Thee for the last time before it drops its seed and dies.

MADAME SWETCHINE.

Then there came forth a summons for Mr. Standfast. And the post brought it him open in his hands ; the contents therein were that he must prepare for a change of life, for his Master was not willing that he should be so far from Him any longer. At this Mr. Standfast was put into a muse. Nay, said the messenger, you need not doubt of the truth of my message ; for here is a token of the truth thereof : "Thy wheel is broken at the cistern." . . .

When Mr. Standfast had thus put things in order, and the time being come for him to haste him away, he also went down to the river. Now there was a great calm at that time in the river ; wherefore Mr. Standfast, when he was about half way in, stood a while, and talked with his companions that had waited upon him thither. And he said, This river hath been a terror to many ; yea, the thoughts of it have also frightened me ; but now methinks I stand easy, my foot is fixed upon that on which the feet of the priests that bare the ark of the covenant stood while Israel went over Jordan. The waters indeed are to the palate bitter, and to the stomach cold ; yet the thoughts of what I am going to, and of the conduct that waits for me on the other side, doth lie as a glowing coal at my heart. I see myself now at the end of my journey ; my toilsome days are ended. I am going to see that head that was crowned with thorns, and that face that was spit upon for me. I have formerly lived by hearsay and faith ; but now I go where I shall live by sight, and shall be with Him in whose company I delight myself. I have loved to hear my Lord spoken of ; and wherever I have seen the print of His shoe in the earth, there I have coveted to set my foot too. His name has been to me as a civet-box ; yea sweeter than all perfumes. His voice to me has been most sweet ; and His countenance I have more desired than they that have most desired the light of the sun. His words I did use to gather for my food, and for antidotes against my faintings. He hath held me, and kept me from my iniquities ; yea, my steps hath He strengthened in His way.

Now, while he was thus in discourse, his countenance changed ; his strong man bowed under him : and after he had said, "Take me, for I come unto Thee," he ceased to be seen of them. But glorious it was to see how the open region was filled with horses and chariots, with trumpeters and pipers, with singers and players upon stringed instruments, to welcome the pilgrims as they went up, and followed one another in at the gate of the beautiful city.

JOHN BUNYAN.

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith ; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day ; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

ST. PAUL.

INDEX.

- ADDISON, Joseph, 124.
 Alford, Henry, 55.
 Amiel, Henri Frédéric, 72.
 Angelo, Michael, Buonarotti, 9.
 Aurelius, Marcus, 43.
 Bailey, Philip James, 87.
 Barbauld, Anna Lætitia, 49, 72, 132.
 Bernard, Sir Thomas, 12, 25, 37, 40, 45, 74, 126, 133.
 Blair, Hugh, 8, 70, 105.
 Bonstetten, 97.
 Boston, Thomas, 113.
 Brown, Brownlee, 7.
 Brown, Howard N., 12, 29, 39.
 Browning, Robert, 3, 42, 46.
 Bryant, William Cullen, 57, 62, 68.
 Bulwer-Lytton, Edward, 127.
 Bunsen, Baroness Amelia, 113, 155.
 Bunyan, John, 147, 163.
 Calvert, George H., 100.
 Charles, Elizabeth, 119.
 Chevreul, M. Michel Eugène, 94.
 Child, Lydia Maria, 4, 16, 33, 118, 120.
 Cicero, Marcus Tullius, 10, 32, 90, 97.
 Coleridge, J. T., 130.
 Collier, Jeremy, 143, 146.
 Cooper, Peter, 114, 161.
 Country Parson, Recreations of a, 81, 146.
 Cowper, William, 113.
 Crabbe, George, 126.
 Dewey, Orville, 9, 27, 64, 74, 111, 134, 138.
 Ecclesiastes, 52.
 Ecclesiasticus, 64, 68.
 Edgeworth, Maria, 145.
 Eliot, George, 16, 28.
 Eliot, William G., 148.
 Ellis, Rufus, 66, 75, 96.
 Emerson, Ralph Waldo, 75, 85, 131.
 Extract, Newspaper, 21.
 Faber, Frederick W., 41.
 Felton, John B., 43.
 Fiske, John, 117, 136.
 Franklin, Benjamin, 90.
 Gannett, William C., 80.
 Gardner, John, 3, 5, 21.
 Garrison, William Lloyd, 130.
 Gasparin, Madame de, 43.
 Hale, Edward Everett, 4.
 Hall, Louisa Jane, 87.
 Hall, Samuel C., 51.
 Hare, Lucy A., 19.
 Hemans, Felicia D., 14.
 Herbert, George, 151.
 Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 1, 25, 38, 77, 84, 133, 139, 140.
 How, Charles, 44, 93.
 Humboldt, William von, 79, 156.
 Hunt, Leigh, 103.
 H. H. (Helen Jackson), 16.
 Job, 11, 108.
 Johnson, Samuel, 18, 82.
 Keary, Annie, 26.
 Kemble, Frances A., 28.
 Landor, Walter Savage, 64, 119.
 Lawless, Hon. Emily, 46.
 Letter, Old, 116.
 Logan, John, 107.
 Longfellow, Henry W., 54, 58,

- 60, 61, 69, 109, 120, 128, 130, 151, 160.
 Lowell, James Russell, 49, 107.
- Maccabees, 149.
 Macdonald, George, 114.
 Mace, Frances L., 36.
 Magazine, Tinsley's, 101, 131.
 Martineau, James, 8, 23, 95, 109, 129, 145, 155.
 Mason, Caroline A., 121.
 Michel, Jean, 127.
 Milton, John, 5, 34.
 Montgomery, James, 34.
 Morison, John Hopkins, 83.
 Mountford, William, 24, 35, 42, 53, 62, 81, 88, 110, 125, 128, 140, 145, 155.
 Muloch, Dinah (Mrs. Craik), 160.
- Neckar, Madame, 46.
 Newton, John, 79.
 Nicoll, Robert, 157.
 Norton, Andrews, 94.
- Oakey, Miss, 112.
- Pamphleteer, The, 5.
 Parker, Theodore, 8, 20, 50, 72, 78, 98, 137.
 Paul, St., 165.
 Persian, From the, 45.
 Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart, 110, 119, 158.
 Pope, Walter, 53.
 Prentice, Mulford, 83.
 Psalms, The Book of, 26.
- Quarles, Francis, 124.
 Quincy, Josiah, Life of, by Edmund Quincy, 25, 31, 100, 116, 135, 139.
- Realf, Richard, 136.
 Renan, Ernest, 58.
- Robertson, Frederick W., 18, 114, 115, 118, 135.
 Robinson, Henry Crabb, 78, 85, 87.
 Ruskin, John, 127.
- Sannazzaro, 107.
 Schefer, Leopold, 74, 102, 111, 134.
 Sears, Edmund H., 130, 154.
 Sewell, E. M., 56.
 Shakespeare, William, 22, 97, 128, 157.
 Smith, Sydney, 66, 110, 123, 126.
 Socrates, 86.
 Somerville, Mary, 93.
 Southey, Robert, 15, 50.
 Spectator, The, 112, 114.
 Stein, Life and Times of, by J. R. Seeley, 14, 54.
 Swetchine, Madame, 68, 79, 156, 162.
 Suckling, Sir John, 28.
 Sydney, Sir Philip, 75.
- Talfourd, Thomas Noon, 142.
 Taylor, Jeremy, 23, 60.
 Tennyson, Alfred, 128.
 Theremin, 152.
 Tilden, William P., 30.
 Trollope, Anthony, 20, 123.
 Tucker, Abraham, 47.
 Tupper, Martin Farquhar, 16.
- Vaughan, Henry, 11, 24.
- Waller, Edmund, 159.
 Watts, Isaac, 124.
 White, Joseph Blanco, 45, 89.
 White, William Orne, 133.
 Whitney, Herbert, 66.
 Whittier, John Greenleaf, 19, 36, 105, 141, 143.
 Williams-Wynn, Charlotte, 37, 40, 160.
 Wordsworth, William, 91.

TEXT AND VERSE

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

Scripture Passages and Parallel Selections from the Writings of JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER, arranged by GERTRUDE W. CARTLAND. Tastefully bound in cloth. 32mo, 75 cents.

This little book of helpful passages for every day is composed of a verse from the Bible and a stanza of similar character from Mr. Whittier's works arranged together. The spirit of Mr. Whittier's poetry renders this association altogether harmonious, and the little book furnishes a series of stimulating and consoling thoughts for the whole course of the year.

Calculated to give strength and comfort to a wide circle, and to increase the poet's admirers.— The Nation (New York).

Very pretty, very cleverly done, and a success of which the authoress may be proud. — The Churchman (New York).

FOUR EXQUISITE BIRTHDAY BOOKS

From the Writings of EMERSON, LONGFELLOW, LOWELL, and WHITTIER.

These Birthday Books are of a high order of excellence. The most striking and beautiful passages in the poems and prose works of these four illustrious writers are arranged on the left-hand pages. On the right-hand pages are given the names of distinguished persons born and the record of memorable events occurring on the same day. A blank space is left under each date. Each of the books has a portrait of the author and twelve illustrations.

The price of the Birthday Books in cloth is $1.00 each, in flexible sealskin, $2.50.

* * * For sale by all Booksellers. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price by the Publishers,

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY,

BOSTON AND NEW YORK.

Beckonings for Every Day.

A Calendar of Thought. Arranged by LUCY LARCOM, editor of "Breathings of the Better Life," etc. 16mo, $1.00.

It aims to give some of the most awakening and inspiring words of the great and good of all ages, and contains quotations from Browning and Phillips Brooks, from Robertson and Channing and Fénelon. The writer is catholic enough to include selections from James Martineau and Newman, and has been especially happy in finding new quotations both in prose and verse for her little volume. — Boston Transcript.

A book of devotional thoughts for daily use, of a much higher order than common. — New York Evening Post.

Flowers and Fruit

From the writings of HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.
16mo, $1.00.

This little book has been prepared with much intelligence and care, and includes a large number of striking and quotable passages from Mrs. Stowe's various works. They form a book of quite remarkable variety, admirable for brief leisure moments. Side titles are inserted in the text for each quotation, so that one can see at a glance what is the subject of each of the selections.

After Noontide.

Selected and edited by MARGARET E. WHITE. 16mo, $1.00.

A book containing passages designed to add sunshine and comfort to the afternoon of life. The selections are from numerous writers, of widely differing schools of literature and religion, but are rendered harmonious by the spirit of cheerful acceptance of the peculiar blessings which advancing years bring, and the recognition of the fact that though some burdens and infirmities may accompany these years, yet they are, or at least may be, full of cheer, of pleasant memories, and of serene hope.

 For sale by all Booksellers. Sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price by the Publishers,*

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY,
BOSTON AND NEW YORK.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 9999 10030 009 2

